And this is supposed to be a "nonlethal deterrent"... Somehow.

If there's no life on earth left after the first shot, then by its second firing, it's technically nonlethal!

Here's another cliché: Nations with unique concepts but no factbooks to show their lore/their factbooks consist of one sentence

Like I'm gonna be real here.

I don't think the mods are perfect, far from it, but I'm much more likely to trust them when they say that someone had a history of rule-breaking and that's why they've been made DOS than I am likely to trust the average NS user who insists that that can't be true.

I know they've always been a thing on this site, but does it feel like there are more 'nations' that are literally just alternate versions of RW nations' these days or is it just me?

You mean nations that are like RW nations but just use an alternate name?

I've noticed that users who joined because of the whole Drew Dumil thing from 2020 seem to treat that incident as something that completely changed NationStates forever when it clearly didn't.

Most of the people who joined because Dumil's video have long sense CTEd and this site suddenly gaining an influx of new users because of something off-site mentioning this game has happened multiple times before Dumil and it'll happen again. It wasn't anything special.
