Not a crime, although Islam no longer exists, at least, not as we know it, and not in Nova.

Burning the national flag

Burning the flag falls under damaging personal property. If the victim pressed charges the perpetrator would likely have to reimburse the cost of the flag. More severe cases can fall under arson.

Stealing a horse?

A horse falling under property, the thief spends the next two days in jail, he shall be fined, the horse returned, and threatend with public humiliation.

Is this the second time he's done this? All of the above, and actually being publically humiliated in his community.

A fight between co-wives (if polygyny is legal) or a fight between a main chick and a side chick (if it isn't)

Even being in a sexual relationship with multiple partners is illegal and warrants forced re-education and several months in prison and heavy fines, however, if the "main chick" had willingly committed to such a relationships she is considered a perp too. Finally, if such a fight occurs using dueling techniques (includ8nf deadly weapons- usual stuff here) the fight by itself is not a crime

The people that assisted on the suicide could easily be accused of murder, on different degrees, and that could easily end up in the death penalty.

Depends on what you mean by "Morally questionable".

If it's a porn sight or a similar it will be heavily monitored and regulated, but no real crime nor punishment there, unless the site hosts child pornography,, in which case the owner and those involved could easily get the death penalty. It entirely depends on what the site hosts.

neglecting a child.
