"Ironbane", despite sounding like an epithet for a legendary warrior in a fantasy setting, is this universe's English word for "railroad". Much like in OTL, they were first built by one Jom Stefanson, with the first being constructed between Leyrpool and Manchester and opened in 1830. Some other English words I found pretty interesting are "witship" for science and "wiselust" for philosophy.

There's some real David Mitchell type stuff going on in East Asia, a fair chunk of it is controlled by the Singularity Association which is basically a State conglomerate of influential high tech mega-corporations which sit at the top of a caste system, literally defined by the biological differences between the wealthy trans-human elite and the working masses whom themselves have been biologically tampered to fulfill specialized roles.

The Republican Party didn't enact the Southern strategy in this timeline and the Democratic Party remained as a "Dixiecrat" party, and by the 1980s, had become a minor third party. The two main parties of the US became the Republican and Progressive Parties. But due to war exhaustion and economic issues, a counter-culture based on a combination of white nationalism and socialism had formed. In the 2010s, Jimmy Webster was the first Democrat elected since the 1950s. He was impeached because of illegally modified and unregistered firearms, and Soviet and Confederate memorabilia was found in his house. Many workers joined a general strike in protest of his impeachment, but it was unsuccessful at the time.

The Hatsunian film industry is one of the most renowned globally, and one of the oldest, having first developed in 1897 - only two years after the first commercial film was screened publicly in Paris. The country has developed its own niche genre of period dramas, known as "jidaigeki", and is known for its sci-fi films. Hatsunian films have won a number of major international awards in the past.

They've got a national education board, and I'm not sure how common or uncommon this is, but it's composed of an elected board of parents, staff, and students, and it honestly seems like a good idea.

The Caleshan use (relatively) stable protomatter generators basically generate some tools of war which are considered simple to make or weapons that are single use, using them much like other armies use disposable sporks and tableware as the protomatter eventually tends to fade away.

AN: They've only got two parties, a hard-right nationalist majority that controls 2/3 of government and a center-right minority that makes up the rest.

According to the Ghesite religion, Clouds are said to be messengers of the Sky-Mother, and Winds are more direct agents. When a person dies, their soul is collected by the Flensing Wind. The souls of people who have achieved important accomplishments become new Winds, while the souls of others are recycled to become new people. There is a philosophy that things are eternally changing except for the Mother and her Winds.

Tokyo has charged headlong into the “hardware future,” still churning out physical devices, valuing manufacturing over coding.

And for what it is worth, that is one of the best things about Hatsunia that I have learned. The acknowledgement that they believe and think that hardware plays an important part, and it's not just software that we need to drastically improve. Sure, the humble screen can only go so far but at the end of the day, software can only push something so far before it hits the limitation of a hardware.

No amount of software will dramatically increase the lifespan of a screen, and no amount of optimised software will help if a mouse is crappy.

This ‘nation’ is ruled by a sentient energy being with an ability to freeze objects and to touch people with ‘hand’ temperature about 30 Celsius, which is OK for outer layers of the skin, I guess. It's stated that the shade of blue was inspired by a certain Antarctic nation with history of a bloodshed.

For a nation who has no actual rivals in or around its borders, Marsoslovakia has a grossly bloated military with near 1.5 million personnel only in the army. The other branches of its military are considerably smaller however, as they make ~0.3 million put together.

Japan is the world's largest economy in their universe, with a GDP of $7.76 trillion (I'm assuming USD isn't actually the standard in this world, which makes me wonder which currency would hold that position in its absence), and one of the five main Great Powers that count among the High Formanship, which I take to be their world's rough equivalent of the G7. In addition to the Japanese Archipelago, it holds the entirety of the Korean Peninsula, the island of Formosa/Taiwan, and the southern half of Sakhalin. It has waged three major wars against China since 1853, and during the Second World War, which was initially the Second Sino-Japanese War or Twithe Chineish-Japanish Crig, they dropped a nuke on Nanjing, which I find morbidly funny. Perhaps a tad more merciful than what actually happened.

Feed-thralls are kept in an inflated state of cognizance in order to increase their capacity to nourish the psionic talents of Khoronzonites. Essentially, they're baseline humans with their muscle growth stymied so they can't run away when it's time to be made into soylent green and Brain-Munchie Snaccs. Why the Khoronzonites don't further industrialize the system to essentially run off of stimulated brains-in-jars is not at all a mystery- though they likely won't admit it, these deldar-level fucks probably enjoy the thralls' agonizing screams from the THZs as a pleasant backdrop to their morning commutes.

Also, The Crusades never happened, the Viking conquest of Britain succeeded, Genghis Khan died as a young prisoner in a tribal camp, Alexander Nevsky united Russia, and the HRE became a centralized state and destroyed France and the Normans.

Rhomania conquered North Africa and Mesopotamia in the 16th century. In 1589, the imperial succession system was codified, increasing stability and making it harder for an emperor to be deposed. The Kantakouzenos dynasty lasted from 1579 to 1949. There was stagnation due to corruption but more infrastructure was developed during the Industrial Revolution.
