Official Judgement of The Overseers:

Judgement: Mercer is undesirable
Punishment: Slave Labor

"It is such a disappointment to see how authoritarians of those days were. John Mercer is so close to perfection, yet so far. His orderly tendencies and support for social darwinism might spare him from execution, but we have many other criticisms of his borderline heretic ways. Laissez-Faire capitalism, for example, degenerates cultural and traditional values by capitalizing on even the nuclear family and religious customs. His support for such a system is not necessarily degenerate, but not desirable either. His corporate-crony rise to power is unacceptable, for the only people worthy of wealth are nobles and lords. His authoritarianism does not go far enough to satisfy us, and we would recommend he use state control of food, vocabulary, daily schedule and thought like us instead of being just a typical autocrat merely engaging in surveillance. He is overall not our desirable type of leader, but certainly superior to others we have judged."

Judgement: Pinochet is even more undesirable
Punishment: Burned alive in a wrecked helicopter

"This August Pinochet is even less desirable than Mercer. His support for anarcho-capitalist minarchy is absolutely unacceptable and of the pure degenerate. Capitalism itself is an aspect of modern degeneracy, though it certainly is superior to godless socialism, and as such would be best in the form of hierarchical state-capitalism. We praise his anti-communism, but condemn his laissez-faire, a system which degenerates cultural values. Pinochet's...

"Well, firstly. I don't actually try to categorize every single human being into a racial box. If anything, I don't think there's a lot of differences between say whites and Asians that can't be attributed to culture. Western civilization is superior, but that is because I see the virtues of democracy and liberty as being superior to the more authoritarian aspects of Oriental civilization. This is why Asians are allowed to reside in America without having a path towards citizenship.

Africans, on the other hand, are lesser in terms of their IQ and ability to reason. That and there is a lot of bad blood between American whites and them. It is no different from the bad blood between your tribes and the civilizations you raid.

So really, I'm pretty open-minded about races that aren't of my world. I mean, I've given my opinion on elves and demons of all things, all of whom I don't really have the same disdain for that I have for negroes.

Exarchs are Exarchs. I don't see how their existence somehow invalidates racial differences in my world. It just means that your world has racial differences that are different from mine. Honestly, I've even considered the idea that negroes in other worlds might actually not be vicious low-IQ apes. That's how multiverse theory works. Anything that can happen has happened in some universe. (Though, the 'United Communists of Africa' really has affirmed that negroes seem to be stupid across the radar for some reason.)

I wonder, though, why you seem to be so defensive about the negro? Why does the Ghesite people have a right to their own nation, and yet white Americans lack the right to assert their own territorial claims on the American continent? If it's the violence and deportations, then I guess you should stop being a nomadic raider and pick up a new hobby. I suggest craft brewing.

Oh, and for my masculinity, maybe I should probably tell you to go back to the kitchen for being a woman or something. I really don't think a warrior woman should police others when it comes to fulfilling gender roles."

"I have always said that democracy is a short fad, nothing but a threat to society and the normal ways of life. However, if ever there were one who might change My mind, it is this Cam Ga-Ram. The sheer masculinity which he radiates is such as I have not seen since the mortals were still in their age of bronze! I cannot fathom what would lead one of such stupendous talent and clearly traditional values to forsake a life of worth, and seek a career as a political criminal, except that it is clearly the result of a tragic sacrifice to honor his completely unworthy waste of a father. I am deeply affected by the dignity and gravitas which he brings to his otherwise worthless nation- though, whatever people it is who created such a sheer specimen of masculinity as him must certainly have some credit. Truly, his existence makes Me have more hope for mortals, as I had given up any chance of true, traditional masculinity making such a glorious return as him."

"The shining light of progress is only shunned by the ignorant who are too frightened or hesitant to step out from the dark. This supposed deity, Ilitu, is nothing more than an obsolete relic of a bygone ancient era, who has no place in any modern world. Having such a long rule over her realm, it is indeed embarrassing that the only progress and reforms made in its history have been when its ruling "great" goddess was indisposed and not presently in control. I do wonder why a goddess requires sleep, though. Does the intensity of the divine powers she possesses require her to rest in order for her to sustain herself? Or is she simply indolent? I would have expected a divine being to not partake in tedious actions attributed to mortals, like sleep. This point makes me wonder why Ilitu is so unwilling to intently rule her people. It is evident that she has strong sway over them, reaching a near absolute level. So too does she express disdain at the reforms made by her people during her periods of slumber. If she can easily control them, and is not fond of what they do once they have some autonomy, why does she not do away with notions of freedom and reestablish her absolute control over Hamatu and its peoples? She clearly has the powers able to do so, being a goddess and all. If it is not clear by now, this being greatly perplexes me. Be its cryptic nature, or just nonsensical practices, I have trouble in understanding its motives and desires. She wants to maintain her rule and the ancient traditions of her realm? Then abolish the Palāpus' freedoms and directly rule them! Why must deities be so dense, so vapid? Of all the supposed gods and goddesses I have encountered, I can safely say that my intelligence always surpasses theirs. I do not claim to be a god, such superstition is beneath me. Yet if I, a mortal, am brighter than deities, then such truly dispels any need for these beings. Them and their foolish religions are worthless, and best left forgotten and abolished, lest their poisonous influences attempt to hold back progress and the modern age. Such is what Ilitu does, hampers the advancement of her nation for little reason else then her being fearful of losing her power. And despite wishing to maintain her rule, still she refuses to take the appropriate action needed to reassert her control over her people. What a useless creature. Those who worship such an idiotic being should be embarrassed. All of this should make it clear of the obsolescence of deities. The age of gods has passed. The new age of progress has replaced it, and I am its torchbearer."

Shal I begin by saying this, how lovely it is that we are both mythical beings! Constantly I see the terrible bickering between different mythical beings, which to be honest is quite annoying. Now it seems that you are a dragon, although not the ones I'm used to. In fact out of the western dragons and eastern dragons I've seen in my 3000 year lifetime... you are truly unique. Now I like to start with the bad when it comes to dirty politics. Firstly I do not like how you are against corporations. Yes many say we need regulations, because companies make mistakes. However regulations only limit the potential companies can do to help benefit the world. Companies can also allow the government to have bigger tax breaks, more freedom, and honestly more money in your pocket. Of course I won't judge you for it. It also seems that you love Welfare, although I do believe that the people should earn for themselves, like I had to. Now on to the good news... It seems that you love nature and the environment just as much as me. You make me smile, as I too believe in a more sustainable government and economy. You also seem to enjoy and support the arts and you seem like a cultured dragon to me.

Wait. What about- what about me? Oh god-"

-Scratch that, political crisis averted. Existential crisis very much not averted.

“ Kiu Ghesik wrote:

Ari, Daughter of Oloughin, She Whose Banner Guides the Thunderhead, Caller on the Council

"I cannot help but sympathize with her, much as I and my people may consider her practices of war—well, for lack of a better word, 'barbaric.' Still, she is a young monarch, thrust upon the throne by her predecessor's health challenges, much like I am... But I am blessed with a peaceful nation prospering in the afterglow of a war we did not have to fight. Perhaps if Baizou were surrounded with enemies on every side, I would not be so different from The Terror from the North."

—Sovereign Oshiro Haruto

"Goodness, when I was her age, I was worrying about passing college calculus, not trying to rule a newborn nation. Some might think it naive of me for my heart to go out to such a seemingly bloodthirsty figure, but Baizou was not so different in the 1300s. We merely had the good fortune of an island's ocean borders and neighbors who were more worried about each other than us. And you can't deny she's talented. I have long wanted to learn how to ride horseback, but horsemanship is not very practical on an island where space is as limited as it is on Baizou."

—Princess Consort Oshiro Yuu

"Struggling to motivate the Council to take action... why does that feel so familiar? If anything, I am blessed by the disinterest of the Parliament of Nobles and Council of Citizens. Both coalitions would rather pacify me by accepting my policies than risk my becoming interested in the magnetic tape regulation disputes they actually care about. I suppose I'm happy that I'm able to do good work for Baizou, but I wish the parties and factions would show as much passion for civil rights, religious liberty, social good, and racial justice as they do for videocassette manufacturing. I can only wish godspeed to Caller Ari in trying to motivate her congress to action."

—Premier Fukushima Sonoko

"Hm, the religionist in me is fascinating by their worship of the Sky Mother. If only they were our contemporaries; it would be a dream to interview the indigenous practitioners of a Bronze Age ethnic faith. Might give some sociological insight into how to study and understand Baizou's own Mahouzouhou religion.

"The historian in me wonders about how to think of their place in the world. Not having the complete story—the fates of Kiu Ghesik and Alechi and the Berghi Empire—makes it difficult to make a moral evaluation, which perhaps I have become too accustomed to making. I suppose I should not moralize so much, but it's hard to help it. I'm used to calling out colonialism, imperialism, anti-indigenism. But who is the victim here? The Ghesites, whose way of life may vanish? The Alechi, subjects of Ghesik? The Berghi, who are reasonably threatened by the Ghesites' armies and raids? I suppose I have been away from the academy for too long. History is not always so simple as evil and good, colonists and colonized."

Mister Haruto seems like a good fella, and their taste in animes and animated movies are something I admire.
