Pilipinas and Malaya's main focus is on foreign relations. It focuses on a "World First" policy.

They care more about the interests of other nations than their own.

It is a rump state of the Nazi Reich on the Svalbard islands. Though rightfully denounced from the international community, it's existence is supported by illegal shipments from right wing sympathizers, who look to the nation as an inspiration.

This nation is entirely reflective of my views and I am a threat to society.

During the Meiji Moeji period in the mid-19th century, a new national capital, Mlrailto ('city of the future?') was constructed on the island of Hokkaido. Though indigenous Ainu people were already there, it doesn't seem that they were forcefully relocated, but rather provided equal standing with Yamahajin.

Nicole Greenwich was an Arcadian stateswoman and military general. She was reportedly born to a family of ethnographers stationed in one of the many colonies that would become Arcadia, making her a future Arcadian citizen. After successfully helping liberate Arcadia in the Arcadian Revolution, the capital, Greenwich City, was named after her. After independence, she ruled for 10 years before succumbing to influenza in 1802.

Despite being culturally and geographically tied to the United States, Spiedska retains the d/m/y date format. Which such close cooperation with the states throughout the 17th and 18th Hundreds, at some point it might have been practical to adopt the MDY or even the Canadian YMD format but I digress.

Well, one thing I've noticed are that the Allies of Haudegen Reich's lore are rather braindead and weak-willed it seems. Interesting as this concept might be, I have a hard time believing that the Nazis would have had a foothold right after WW2. If you want historically authentic lore, [Arthur 'Unburnt German city? I have learned several interesting bits of their school curriculum! ^^

- The fact that they seem to leave the students to fend for themselves for the most parts unless they are in danger. Now this seems irresponsible... at first glance, but I believe that given the benevolent nature of the nation, it just means that they give the students the freedom and independence to exercise their thoughts and decisions, all the more while protecting them when actual danger presents itself. So that's pretty good, and suffice to say that in Bloodshade, the students and kids are well taken care of!

- Video games, Military Theory, D&D, Self-Defense, and Pest Control as a few of the most popular after-school activities. Pest Control is an interesting one, albeit something that is much needed, simply because it's one of those life skills that people should have, no? Not to kill, but just to make sure on what to do if you have, say, a nasty roach infestation! ><

- "Yes, there's a break period of 1 hour at the end of the day where Romance and Love-making class takes place. Students can eat lunch during classes" Love-making class, I see... 😊 Heh, is that what I think it is? Or maybe is it an extension of Sex-Ed? Or a really huge extension of Sex-Ed, if you know what I mean!

I only wonder what kind of school food will you guys get... I always love small trivial bits like these!

The military marches and songs of Valentine Z have a bizarre and measurable real effect on the soldiers that listen to them. For example, the Battle Cry of Freedom (a personal favourite of mine) supposedly increases the movement speed of infantry by 20%, whilst Battotai can increase the damage output of any given unit by 25%. How the music of Valentine Z effects their soldiers in this way, and indeed how many of these effects can even be measured in the first place, I do not know.

The High Princess is an elected figure which can roughly be considered similar to a President/Premier or Chairman whom also has the obligation to fulfill what they deem "heritage conservation" in an almost ritualized/ceremonial manner with all the royal regalia to add. So, think more about tiaras and pretty dresses and not Hero of the Soviet Union medals.
