a random painting made by an obscure artist, maybe fines, or being forced to work for the state until you generate the money that that painting was worth. If something like the mona lisa analogue was stolen, 30 lashes, which will progressively increase by 10 if it is done again. For digital art, like copying an artist's work, only a fine. For speculative "crimes", maybe like adding people's artwork without their consent to an ai algorithm to generate art, that is not a crime.

From 1 week in prison (if the defendant has confessed the crime & the piece in question is absolutely intact) up to 3 years in prison (if the defendant lies, and the piece was intentionally damaged very heavily or completely destroyed)

Well, that is not illegal in itself. Video games are not really permitted, but that's a general thing.

not an issue since illegal immigrants are so few that are generally registered and accepted. If one day we will have an illegal immigration problem and a guard refuse to follow the law, he/she will probably fined and maybe fired.

If caught, one hour community service to repay the theft; however, if left unpunished, simply ignored.

It's not a crime, but drivers are fully permitted to run you over if you do so, and then sue your family if any of your blood splattered on their car or caused any damage.

Simple arrest with prison time for murder. I'd say that Vareshia's prison system is definitely enough to be torturous without doing anything special or irregular.
