Taking off the Eternal Emperors pants is considered an attack on the Emperor and can give up to life in prison. However considering that it is rather mild it would probably be a sentence of a few months and a fine.

In the metropoly it is a punishable offense to do this unless ordered by court in which case it becomes perfectly legal. Not all anti-state people are subject to being executed of course.

In colonies punitive raids against anti-colonial locals are a usual thing- so perfectly legal!

Depends. Due to national traditions, as well as Lakan people having extremely restricted sexual feelings, it's surprisingly not a crime in some areas. However purposely showering ones private areas in areas where such activity is specifically prohibited will easily land one in jail for a couple of days. Police may or may not beat up the suspect in the process.

Hmm, if the one they are communicating with is a terrorist group, it is indeed spying and therefore punishable with Death Penalty.

If that is just among the people, it happens every day in the Aquaria despite having a low support rate of anti-communist-party movements.

Capital Punishment

by Schlussland » Fri May 27, 2022 10:49 pm

Any spread of information that in contrast to the information provided by the Government of Schlussland is punishable based on the level of violation:

- Voicing a negative opinion about the government will see said citizen placed on a government watch-list and see a reduction in their social credit.
- Voicing a negative opinion that leads to demonstrations and violence will lead to the implementation of the the death penalty. NO citizen maintains the right to disturb national discourse and are viewed as a drain on the nation's economy by paying for a life of imprisonment.
- Vitriolic language towards the government will be met with swift capital punishment in a public forum to meet two goals: the taking of life who no longer has the right to live and a physical message to public of what the individual's crimes against the state will cost everyone if they choose a similar path.

These laws are in place in to make sure law and order prevail in Schlusslandi society.
