The Space Race proceeded as normal in the GoM timeline, except it went much, much faster and more advanced than usual, and the bootleg ESA done was the most powerful agency, not NASA. Also, 3/4 of their Arkships sent to escape the Earth... literally just became the Donner Party in space.

@AAN:

I learned that the user reads Tom Clancy novels, interesting! How are they?

Oh, also, Socialist Macronesia seems to be surviving economically primarily on extractive industries like oil and natural gas. The History page is incomplete, though, and the Economy page has yet to be started, so the Isolationist Republic's current financial situation may be different now.

Ninja'd.

@AN:

I learned that the story of CBG Palisade features a... well, frankly, a very grim vision of the future. The OOC "Much Needed Context" dispatch runs through a brief future-history of the world where climate crisis, resource depletion, and political deadlock lead to a near-total collapse of normal society planetwide, with nations ripped apart by desperate secessions and ecosystems shattered by rising temperatures and mass die-offs. About the only good news in the Exhaustion section is that the world really does achieve carbon neutrality... in the 2200s. Man. CGB's story has already been pretty grim, but knowing it's built on the bones of our universe makes it even grimmer.

I'm a little surprised that the Objects and PALISADE project didn't make it into the new Overview on the front page (which I think is a very nice addition!). Are the ultranationalist AI spaceships taking a backseat in the story of Liam's Reach now?

A full 25% or so of all the people on the FAU Earth are members of a religion that worships ~~Rennie Raygun~~ Ronald Reagan. Or more specifically, that Reagan is the messenger of God himself. And... it's literally just Islam, but with Reagan instead of Muhammad.

Their history began by Precursor Organization, a military faction which smuggled weapons, assassinated and trafficked and distributed drugs.

Our nation is Poland, but there was a great Nazbol revolution, which overthrew the PZPR and freed Poland from USSR, in 1993. The Iron Curtain still exists, but it has changed its borders.

Interesting, It's seems the Soviets have tolerated the existence of Strasserites and National Bolsheviks within their bloc. This strange Poland actually has a vested interest to help their comrades abroad, whether their Nazbol or not. The Soviets also got kicked in the nuts and forced out of their faction by the Poles in the end. Well, that's certainly ironic.

A solid 40% of housing in Nacrad is public-owned (or was public-owned and is being sold to private homeowners), an outgrowth of WWII-era programs to provide affordable housing to low-income victims of a fire. Seems to have expanded to provide low-cost housing in general, though the Nacradian state's swapped to renting out housing, rather than selling it. I guess in Nacrad, the state really is the biggest landlord.

Okay, so, in Liagolas, names are nonexistent, instead you're referred to by number, and then, pronouns like "he" or "her" don't exist in Liagolas as everyone, and I mean, EVERYONE has to be called "it" instead, alongside that, not a lot of people know what's going on there, so they have to rely on some sources, i.e. the whole "about the dominion" stuff.

The US became violently isolationist in 2013 when the GLA War began, with the official position of the government being "The US is the only country in the world" and that "there is no war with the GLA". Which of course came to bite them in the ass when the GLA started throwing ICBMs around, until the Special Forces just couped their way into office to deal with the issue.

"According to their Doctrine, the detection of any force within a 3 jump point radius which is approximately 12.7 lightyears away from friendly territory, large scale evacuations are to take place into one of the Commonwealths 17 mega constructions located within the Rothari Triangle...

Not gonna lie chief that sounds like a bit much, moving that many people sounds like it would take a while unless you have large scale teleportation. It would probably be easier and less time consuming to simply have numerous bunker options available away from the fighting. Unless the enemy is fond of planet crackers which I don't think is likely considering that planetary defense shields exist... I mean who would blow up a planet right? You would have to be crazy.

Moving on.

The Planetary Defense doctrine of the Commonwealth also suggests a focus on stretching out the field of battle to extend enemy supply lines, which might be a bit hard ain't it? If they've achieved orbital superiority they can decide where they plan their landings and bombard any attempts to position out of shielding yes? Just some ramblings, good read!"

What is now New Randyland was mostly inhabited by "indigenous tribes" (how can they be indigenous if they settled there?) and untouched by civilisation until the 19th century, at which point they were "discovered" by this bloke named Walker, who took over the land and organised it into a colony named Walker's Lands.

On November 8th, 2008, due to the Democratic party losing their elections for the first time in forever, they literally started a parliament brawl that somehow ended in several people injured... and with the Communist party winning the fight.

Also, apparently they swore in their leaders only one day after the constitution was created, which seems a little fast. Might want to look it over some more before you make someone swear on it to become president.

On February 21 1980, an attack occurred during the 1980 Lake Placid Winter Olympics. The attack was later revealed to be on a different militant group's headquarters, who had been planning an entirely separate attack on the Olympics using a synthesized chemical weapon, which was stolen by PO operatives, along with $3.3 million dollars in cash, weapons, and drugs. No individuals have been implicated or charged.
