This thread has already become one of my favorites on the site. And I don't know why. Help.

ppl really do base their entire personality over whether or not they like having fictional characters on their flag or not.

in the grim-darkness of 2022, the 7th Forum has fallen into anarchy over the existence of animated drawings on flags.

Sad fact, I suppose. Inevitable, but still kinda saddening.

I don't want to be an egotistical centrist here, but both sides of the "anime flag waifu good/bad" debate on this site do have some points, guided or not. Shocker, eh? I would say it ultimately depends on execution, size, dimensions, basically anything concerning angles, and the Vanilla Wafer selected for the job. It's also affected by the user using it or condemning it, depending on how much of an insufferable dickweed they are to either side. For god knows what reason, there's a lot of factors in that of all things.

No one should fucking care about anime flags. We have retread this topic so many damned times that even complaining about how many times it has been brought up on this thread is trite. Why can't we go back to having fun complaining about dumb wholesome monarchs or people making alternate histories that have no regard for how much their point of divergence would actually change the world or people not knowing modern combined arms tactics, for the love of God anything but continuing this shit again.

Boring alt-history nations (they put me to sleep) are becoming even more common lately. Too many America ones, they all start blending together into one mass. Usually don't make much sense either, though that's not a requirement.

Generic FT nations are a dime a dozen but there's just something about generic alt history LARPs that just puts me to sleep.

Also, people who wait like 2-3 posts, then post again, for pages at a time like bro just relax we can only repeat the same thing on your short unchanging sig so many times, or if half your posts are from that thread (like out of context) what are people supposed to say anymore
Gotta give yourself a self-imposed cool down on each thread imo, just annoying to see the same nation every time I come back to a thread

The problem is mostly that people use template nations without putting any effort in to make them actually good.

Like, you can take a basic concept and still make it interesting by putting in quality.

Or you make a concept that is weird enough so it is still interesting.

Optimally, you do both the unusual concept and making it good.

But those who do the template nations don't do either. And it mostly will lead to them being forgotten.

Like, I personally can't keep most of the authoritarian americas apart from each other, they all blend in together in my head like a big, "OH LOOK I AM SO COOL" sludge. Same for the generic communist nations, the barely different eaglelands, the standard european monarchy, the generic authoritarian dictatorships, the space empires with a 1800's mindset, etc. If you are one of those, you honestly can just stop actually writing, cause none of it is gonna be remembered when it joins the pile of generic sludge.

To those who I am referring to there, stop wasting everyones time with having to deal with your unimaginative, creatively bankrupt, generic nation that won't leave a lasting impact. Noone wants to read your nationwanks.

Y'all are so unimaginative, basing your nations on real-life countries and fictional ones in popular culture. Why not make nations based on each other but plainly mocking them?

This

I largely based GWO on my RL beliefs with some changes to account for the fact that (most) of the people in it didn't grow up in the US like I did, but I still also include plenty of social ills, problems, inefficiencies, and outright horror stories of government overreach- no ideology or governing style will solve all issues, it's simply a matter of choosing which ones you'd rather have to accept. Sure, back when I used to RP, GWO went around smashing communist countries to the point where there wasn't an organized left-wing alliance in II, and that was pretty cool and in line with my ideals, but I saw the real human cost for both the countries being invaded and the GWO's own people as an excellent subject matter for writing. It kind of loops around to a post I made earlier, where a lot of democratic nations like to RP as if their social programs all work, and there's also conveniently no real opposition politically to the whims of their leader, who also never seems to leave office! And, despite losing hundreds of thousands of troops in a totally unjustifiable war and a lack of a major military culture, there's no shortage of volunteers, so even though "conscription can be used," it conveniently never has to be!

That is a problem with a lot of fiction, that the authors personal politics are inserted as something unfathomable right and the opposing ones are depicted as the worst beings imaginable.
This is what led me to the decision to make the Wormfodder Delivery Service into something that has little relation to my personal outlook. Even if I accidentally let some of my views sicker through and tend to sometimes do some jokes about them.

Personally, I find it more interesting if one were to make the ideals one finds abhorrent irl into the good guys ones and the ones they identify with into the evil antagonists one. Although I personally am currently not exactly capable of writing that. Except maybe as a piece of humor-writing, but that would defeat the point of actually analyzing the other viewpoints.

Bruh I remember when years ago my nation was a sort of caricature of my views, and it was really fucking boring. I ended up completely redoing it with the name being the only things unchanged. Tbh not it's way less about politics and more about weird worldbuilding bc I got inspired by this one webseries/arg lol.

A post-apocalyptic nation located entirely within a megastructure amidst a burning Earth, in a world where reality barely holds together and magic arises from the cracks.

tbh, there is a fine line between "making a nation you'd like to live in" and "preaching to the masses about how great your ideology is"

I have no problem with the former. Hell, many of the nations I have made I would consider better to live in than my current position. It's just when I hear some guy make long NSG-esc rants (even if it's under the guise of IC) about how great their nation is because they follow omega-hyper-based Neoliberalism/NeoConservatism/Fascism/Communism? Yeah, that's what bugs me.
