If a minor, a good scold and a little bit of scare.

If not a minor, up to 6 months of jail and fines. If trying to impersonate other people to make debts on its name, up to 5 years in jail, depending on the amount of money defrauded.

It depends on what exactly you define as hate speech. In Andronya hate speech is considered when you call for violence to be enacted on a person or group of people Ex. "We should kill all (insert racial slur here)" or "That goddamn (insert name here), we should go to his house and murder him/her". In those cases you can go to jail and get fined as well, that criminal background will make it impossible for you to own firearms in the future, and last but not least, depending on the circumstances, the chat group could be taken down. However, if someone only said "I hate (insert racial slur here)" then no penalty whatsoever, there is a difference between hating someone and calling for violence against someone.

The decision would be left up to the organisers, but most likely a disqualification and revocation of medals (if won), and a ban from participating.

~~Punishable by death!~~ Due to a lack of tea consumption, the population seems to not care about suspicious salmon handling. Not a crime.

Depends on the loophole itself, and you can usually be fined independently of the loophole, although you'll rarely go to prison for one. For example; if you evaded taxes through some loophole the penalty will be that you will have to pay the taxes you evaded plus an extra fine. Just because you tried to be a smartass.

Protests by themselves are illegal. If such an action was undertaken by riot police (or assisting Drushinniki civilians) after orders to surrender were given there is little to no limit on the amount of violence committed. The whole concept of police brutality is all but nonexistent in Laka.

Speaking of police brutality, pulling a Derek Chauvin?

Not a crime to drink lake water. If by "drain it all" you are including the animals in the lake, possibly guilty of killing an endangered species, punishable by a fine of up to 50,000 liberos and/or one year in prison per animal killed.

Interesting case... since if you fled the country then you probably got caught elsewhere, and you probably wouldn't be able to be prosecuted for crimes in Andronya if you're in some other country, and odds are the host country wouldn't extradite you to face prosecution in Andronya. So more than likely the circumstances wouldn't allow you to be punished. HOWEVER, if you somehow ended up in Andronya and got caught you would get fined for the total amount of money you got from the insurance plus a considerable extra fine.
