When "Modern Warfare 3" features a D-Day style opposed amphibious landing, something that hasn't happened on that scale since the Korean War, it's not surprising that mainstream ideas of 21st century warfare are skewed.

This is why Past Tech is the superior era of RP, and yet tragically under-appreciated.

Better yet, an RP where you control some high-level civilization that is controlling lesser beings in a simulation from the big bang all the way to the death of the universe.

An RP within an RP, complete with banter between controllers.

This was originally a trope online, but over time it became so over-used that it's a cliché; it's opposite still remains a trope. It's a situation.

"now it's OOC, now it's srs bro", implicitly or explicitly. Basically, "It's OOC so I'm serious I'm a serious guy IRL bro you went too far". This cringe has subcategories within it which are also clichés, such as but not all;

- I play an 'evil' or antagonistic country and I have heel-turned very suddenly and over a small thing. (along with being bs, it's a sin against fourth wall breaks).
- HELLO ARE WE DISCUSSING SOMETHING CONTROVERSIAL? OH WELL I WRITE IN ALL CAPS NOW TO POTENTIATE HOW SRS IT IS.
- I'm usually hyperactive but I lost an argument, was betrayed or whatever - Now I will be silent so people notice how upset I am and that it's SRS.
- Hey I know I usually argue that morality bad but bro you went too far..too soon bro.

So, I guess the thought is: I need social credit virtue signal approval points and I am so moral that I will throw this random person under the bus to get it. Brave.

-The mentioned "opposite" is where they take IC too seriously is still somehow a trope, it's not redundant or bland. To be honest, the responses of "IC is srs" people are amazing to read sometimes.

Subject title? The whole fallacy of the "IC/OOC" strict dichotomy - I'll be addressing that globally soon. It doesn't exist.

... Jesse what the fuck are you talking about.

I too don't understand, but regarding IC/OOC, as previously said I put IC/OOC tags in every of my factbooks since some NSG people once believed that the abominations I wrote are my actual beliefs lmao. Also, I used biased PoVs quite strongly so there's that, I guess.

Cliche: Complex flags getting some dunking on them. An example of this I can provide is Frisemark.

I honestly don't see what's so wrong with making your flag a little bit complicated and detailed. I think it's just fine to make such a flag as long as you aren't stuffing way too much stuff on them or making it so that there is way too much going on; I think that they can look quite nice when there's some complexity behind it.

Somewhat related cliché, people basing their opinion of a nation's flag partially on the images imposed over them (like yours does). Like, if I were to rate your flag or choose between your flag and another nation's, I'd just pretend like Assad wasn't there and base my opinion on what it looks like in my head after that, but I've seen people get negative reviews on their flags just for clearly OOC meme shit and I find it endlessly frustrating

It's a vexillological cliché imo, people sticking really close to the 5 rules of vexillology, number 1 being: "Keep It Simple. The flag should be so simple that a child can draw it from memory."

I can't be bothered to interact with 90% of this site tbh just such a drain to put all this effort into a post then mr funny man (thinks they're very clever and funny) makes some worthless post in response

Really makes me ponder why I bother ever posting on this site

It's like imagine going to a grocery store with the goal of buying some bananas, but there's been no quality control so almost every banana is rotten
And every day you come back, it's the same. Sometimes you get a nice bunch, but is it worth it to keep going to the same grocery store?

Maybe this site just has too many younger people on it for me, it's boring to try to interact with other people just to have some fool spew out some garbage post right after. I guess I also just shouldn't expect literally anything from F7, that is my fault for expecting some standard in the place for "shit posting"
