Their factbooks are mostly unfinished, but from what I am able to tell, Nekos and these 'Naagas' are both considered at least tolerable and are allowed to rule over massive areas with millions of people under a constitutional yet feudal monarchy.

If you don't have factbooks, why are you posting in a thread that requires factbooks? I can excuse subjectively shitty responses, but this? This is just... why

Bruh, not to sound condescending, but for the love of god, please try to put some effort into your replies; yes, it's "holy shit Ireland", but do you really have nothing else to say about it? You're making those who actually put some effort into their stuff feel bad.

They live in an alternate history where the Anglo-Norman invasion of Ireland was a failure. Ireland is united under some sort of elective monarchy, with colonies in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and elsewhere. Oddly, "New England" isn't called something else (like New Ireland, for example), even though the English never seemed to have ever gotten their hands on it.

Duchess Eleanor of Aquitaine, arguably one of the most powerful landlords (landladies?) in the French Realm, wed Edward IV of England back when he was still only Prince Edward. Their offspring, later Harold III, would inherit a large portion of the French Realm upon his mother's passing, which arguably set the stage for the 100 Years' War between England and France. It's a creative way of justifying the War that made France and England what they are without bringing in the mess that would be a successful William's Conquest (which was what in reality led to the equivalent of that marriage OTL).

I don't know if you stick to the actual Holy Roman Empire that existed in our RL historical period, but if so, then as is characteristic of it. It's a "country" comprised of many squabbling duchies, kingdoms, city-states and empires.

All in, not much of an advantage when having to fight an enemy that requires a monolithic commitment out of all these nations, or if God forbid..a certain type of religious schism happens.

The Royal Palace has two separate medical wings that are for all intents and purposes fully functioning state of the art hospitals. One for the royal family, the other for their caretakers.

Damn thing should have its own nuclear reactor and at least three ICBM launchers. And one of those ICBMs should not actually fire a warhead, but just have a taxicab mounted on the top just so they can add 'longest trip a taxi has ever taken on one tank of gas' to all the other entries to the Guinness book of world records.

In their timeline, WWI ended as a premature stalemate as people around the world mysteriously gained superhuman abilities in an event known as the Great Epiphany, causing mass unrest and revolts. One of these was a first-generation Italian-American named Giulio Arandulli, who would later establish the Imperium and rename himself to Julius Arandulus, becoming its first Emperor.

I swear I've seen a very similar premise on NS before. Sacrum Imperium Americanum, is that you?

In their timeline, the Quebecois referendum for independence happened earlier, with the Canadian government interfering in the referendum. With the referendum not favoring the option for independence, Levesque was outraged and was assassinated by a partisan, which sparked the Secessionist Wars. Frankly, the Ku Klux Klan apparently supported the Canadians in this timeline.

Since their independence was given to them by the Greeks, they have suffered from a rather chronic case of 'Shit That Just Don't Quit', being plagued by tribal strife, British conquest, armed revolution AGAINST British colonial rule, communist rebels, fascist rebels, islamist rebels, rather impressively in that order (if I read the entry correctly).

With the whole population seemingly focused on making more... uh... population, they seem to like having sex very much, and by extension, are devoted to raising kids. Also, why can you be for science and learning but against technology? While I seem to understand how (with all the magic powers and stuff)... just... why?

King Adelbrand is an ugly but totally chad boi who started his crusading career at the ripe old age of 19. He got tuberculosis some time after, but didn't die, and went on to lead more troops against the Danes. He then, like the absolute madlad he is, went to Jerusalem and kicked Persian arse, later to be crowned by the pope himself as King of the Levant. He's such a madlad he even founded his own CK2 bloodline. What makes me think, however, is why Thor's hammer is in his coat of arms despite being this world's equivalent of Christian.
