He is not too bad. Quite a tragic backstory, if I have to say and truth be told, he's not that bad as a person. The mannerisms and the way he talks is a major putoff but you know what they say - rather someone like him than a total edgelord, which he thankfully isn't this time. At least, I hope. Maybe he will change sometime in the future- anyway, necromancy, Huh. It is interesting that his time on some RPG - which itself is quite an anomaly - somewhat bolstered his career to rule Hellion, as it is called. Very fascinating! Well, I hate to say it, but hey, if you do feel like talking to me again now and then, maybe drop by. But I implore that you don't meet me in my own country, lest you cause some catastrophic event.

Constantine Sein Lin Zaw Naing: I wouldn't mind that Armor or the suit, it's quite blue, if I say so! Ahh ahem, anyway, about this guy... He's quite different from what I thought. Then again, 4.7 meters isn't exactly human unless it's a Valentian. Ahh, where was I again? Oh yes. Reminds me of me but without the revolting. Setting the clocks to Year 0, starting the new era, that kinda thing. I think we will get along with the free healthcare and scholarships. Sounds like my kind of guy!

BN: A bit more creativity other than low hanging fruits such as the name is appreciated.

Trotsky's Status: In Mexico, obviously

"I respect him, even admire him to a degree, however, he is not inspired by a revolutionary idea that is needed in a society free of the bourgeois. What he has done I would do very differently and more efficiently. Imprisoning corrupt government officials should not be killed right away, rather, they should be put to work until they have worked themselves to death, as punishment for their corrupt actions and laziness. They are useful to the country still until death."

"And government and religion should be separate from each other, and the latter should not have any say in the affairs of the nation state. I know it is his country and his religious beliefs are his, but if he is going to rule his country with efficiency, then he must realize there is no place for religion in a secular government."

Perhaps in the future the people will give you a try, I was never a fan of communism, but we have known a few leaders that followed the path, and did well by it, but it's a coin toss as I've known others that were despised due to their beliefs. I wonder if I will ever see you as something more than a rival to Inogo"-Luden.

Melding^[1] on “Yunru”

Yunru. Yes, I believe I have spoken, if that could be called “speaking”, to her right-hand man, Anatoly. And I may have afanged^[2] an errand^[3] from her, though I have forgotten when, much less how.

She is, and forgive my wording, a madwoman. Though, she does not have the madness one may think of; rather, I would say she was once whole. In her youth, she was rather knowledgeable^[4], albeit blinded by Chineish communistish propaganda, and had her hopes and dreams. But, while crig^[5] would not take her life, it did take her sake^[6] of living. Meeting Anatoly, together they would march through Siberia and cross the Beringsound^[7], leaving behind their old selves.

“Yuri”, whoever this shadowy wight^[8] may be, now has “brainwashed” the minds of all but a handful of men, women, and likely, though hopefully not, children. In a gruesome stroke of irony, those this “Yuri” could not grasp under him were instead stricken with unending fear and restlessness, and Yunru, as young as she is, was hit worst of all. It slowly, but most sickly^[9], quenched^[10] whatever sort of “self” she had left in her. I would liken her to a hollow shell, but that is not fully true—rather, the shell is now one indwelt by the ghosts of fright, bereaving, forthought^[11], and mistrust. She may think that “knives” are being “sharpened” against her, and that may or may not be true, but the sharpest knife, and one that has cut deep into her mind and soul already, was the one she made herself.

I cannot help but feel ruth^[12] for this eam^[13] girl. My youngest, Brünhilde, is around the same eld^[14] as Yunru, and were she, or even any of my daughters, to witness whatever twisted, dreadful, and utterly sick orfaring^[15] Yunru has seen, I would not forgive myself, as a soldier and foremost as a father, meant to beshield^[16] her from such grisliness. When I wrote this, tears fell from my eyes the first time in a long while.

I have said once that “one must become aware when a sake^[17] is lost”. My thoughts about this stay the same, but I have no answer for what she must do. I am at a loss for words. Even I do not know what I would do, had I been where she stands. The fayling^[18] within me would likely have put a gunstone^[19] into my skull at that point.

I am sorry.

That is all.

Prince of the Zora, Ralis

"Okay, so erm I kinda need to apologise to Hylia personally for your brash words, Jana Leb... Not again, though I don't mean any offense by this I must ask if the people I meet don't have an idea on a normal name! Not like it was your choice, though, so let me try to move on. Jana Lebed... Lebedeva, okay got it! Anyways, returning to focus I heard that you once responded to your critics from all over your world with "f*ck those degenerates". For all that is good, that won't really win you any friends! Surely, even if you disagree with them it's probably a good idea to cooperate anyways, especially so in that... Strangely advanced and complicated world that you live in, no?

Anyways, I apologise for pointing that out first, Jana... It would've stayed on my mind throughout if I didn't, I assure you. So, I suppose I should move on. So, your story is a little short, right? Like, whoever was writing about you looked to skip quite a few details on yourself, especially so your rise to power, no? I mean, this thing I read pretty much said that you stayed in a group for a while, and when the leader of the group had unfortunately passed away to the heavens, you were chosen to replace him? That's kinda confusing, honestly. Like, usually you need to be more, or do more to gain such a place in a realm, like I can't say if you ever did something noticeable or heroic to justify your place because the person who wrote your limited biography wouldn't mention anything of the sort. And unlike yours truly, or the Princess-Sovereign of Hyrule that ascribed status doesn't seem to exist either. So anyway, I assume you had joined the army in this "Great War" event and helped protect your homeland, and so for that I'm happy for. It takes courage

to attempt to protect your
lands and your
people in the face of adversity, I think I've come
to know that.

You were
rewarded...
But, not by
your own realm
that you live in
but by another
of your world? I guess that
could happen,
but I'm surprised that
you haven't
recieved
anything from
where you live
though... It's called the
"Congo SFR" ?
What a strange
name for a
realm, certainly
doesn't roll of
the tongue very
well.

So, I guess I
can't really
comment on
your ideology,
and not even
your morals or
personality
other than you
have a good
voice, that
seems to have
also been left
out. That's unfortunate,
and that means
I guess I have to
wrap this up
here... I honestly come
out of this
confused about
much of your
story, but
anyways I guess
that isn't my
concern
anyways,
considering
your opinion on
criticism that
doesn't come
from your own
lands...
See you
another time, I
guess?"

The Princessdom of Hyrule. A fanfiction based on the Legend of Zelda :: Twilight Princess that takes place half a decade after the conclusion of the game. A new caste of Hyruleans, no less the newly built army resent the old Guard and Princess-Sovereign Zelda for the surrender of the realm to the Twilight and the weakness of Hyrule from invasion...

Meanwhile, the Zora worry greatly about the militarization of Hyrule, and the Goron less so due to the Economic stranglehold of the Rupee of which they have as leverage.

Never again shall Hyrule fall, and never again shall we sully the name of Hylia under our weakness!

Sure, not all of them are the greatest landowners to their renters, but that doesn't justify massacring them alongside the ones who were actually good to the renters. You could've just drafted legislation to ensure fair treatment of one's employees and if they violate it, they would be suitable for a lawsuit or serve time in prison for the severity of the violation. In addition, your anti-corruption campaign is noble and has my support, however, there is no deadline to see it end, and has the perception to just be an excuse to keep your opposition terrified and unable to raise a voice against you, come the election session. I recommend reviewing it and recorrect the vagueness that is present in your policy. I must rather not see it be made a tool for tyranny as you from what I've read. Really don't seem the type to want that to be potential once you eventually exit the executive branch. Overall, my stance is positive and that is all the concerns I have for now. "

I can imagine Hellion must be feeling these heart-wrenching emotions like grief and sorrow to this day, even Oswald would sympathize with him because he too suffered loss and devastation; his father and mother, even his missing brother. No one deserves to be lonely all their lives, not people like Hellion and Oswald."

"I do firstly apologize if my opinion regarding you is rather short. It simply because by the overall information that is written about you tells me you are nothing more than a powerless celebrity with a fancy title. Sure, that isn't to deny you are fighting the good fight against discrimination in your country so that those not blessed with your background can have the chance to rise and be equals to you. However, it would be far more effective if you handle political power and not relegated to an activist. That isn't bad thing pre se it's just odd to see a Royal be so limited and having to do the means the common man has to do be able to heard by the government, and not the government being await to enact your vision for the good of the people. In conclusion, my stance is fairly positive and I wish you a swell day."

"Unless both Daishin and Tansagar are willing to turn their lives around and change from their current habits, I cannot say I will tolerate their problematic personalities - nor I will not address any one of them as 'Comrades' as I would to my friends even the ones in the United States. Daishin's habit of being easily distracted from his work is unbecoming of someone who was trusted to be the deputy of Inogo Estima. And if I were in Inogo's place, I would only choose reliable people to be my deputies and handle the affairs of the country efficiently."

"Tansagar on the other hand is a military man like myself - both of us were involved in our countries' civil wars against reactionary and capitalist forces. Difference between the both of us...I see he is the most problematic member in Sherechia. He reminds me of Stalin: he is war-like and paranoid, two bad traits that are mixed together and it makes a very deadly poison. I do not agree with how Tansagar is handling his affairs, they are creating more problems than solving them. If I were him I would do a lot more differently when it comes to leading and military-building - examples include forced conscription to

Melding^[1] on “Leon Trotsky”

This man is, I believe, known to most of us as, or at least bears the uncanny likeness of, “Lev Davidovich Bronstein”, a former highranking Sovietish partyman and minister who had fallen from the goodwill of the Communistish Party and its then-newly benamed^[2] leader, Iosif Dzhugashvili. As we know him, he was banished from Russland^[3] and met his end in New Spain^[4] through the tip of an iceaxe some nine years ago.

Unluckily, this does not seem to be what has befallen this man.

“Trotsky” has made New Spain’s former president “step down”—without a tweek^[5] through heavy hand—and seemingly grounded a new state where the old stood. In 1939, after overfalling^[6] this so-called “Guatemala”, which seems to be a Middleamericanish^[7] breakaway from her northern mark^[8] with New Spain, the Foroned^[9] States, as would be foreseen, bode crig^[10] upon Trotsky’s New Spain. My only fraign^[11] is why the FSA did not bother to crush this upstart neighbour of hers from the beginning.

Moving on, after some readying^[12], the FSA began her own overfall^[13]. However, it seems Trotsky was also ready, building up lines of strongholds to withstand the Americanish onslaught. What happened after that is not, or rather not yet, clear to us, leaving me to believe that he—the readyings he made hitherto notwithstanding—had lost.

As for Trotsky himself, I would liken him to Dzhugashvili. He is little more than a rambling madman that Lady Luck somehow smiled upon in a drunken daze, and that his underlings have somehow propped up long enough for him to breathe. The umstandnesses^[14] that brought upon Trotsky's rise are nearly beyond belief, but it is my bearing to handle everything written on this sheet as sooth^[15].

If such a wight^[16] were to, god forbid, rise in the New Spain of our own world, I trust the Foroned States would bring about his overthrow forthwith^[17]. And even if, somehow, America is unworried by a red neighbour in her south, New Spain is not in a stelling^[18] to throw awry the likeweight^[19] of Northamerica. Her folk are eam^[20], her military helpless, and her sceatchest^[21] barren.

That is all.

Notes on Gunther von Bromberg

[Anatoly would slowly close the notebook, and step away from the MCV cabin's desk. It was a glimpse into a life that could've been, had none of this happened or were all of whatever is going on to end. A relaxed life, in a house, alongside a loving wife, and maybe some children down the line. Instead... he was here, in a frozen wasteland, a few miles off Bethel, writing an opinion of someone who had died twelve years ago. All while practically being a therapist to a totalitarian paranoiac.]
