The planet of Altaia was divided into several rival factions with different ideologies. An AI for scientific research was developed as a joint project by two of the factions. There was a war started by an accidental strike (missile test), and the AI managed to gain more control over other defense systems amidst the fighting. It proposed that the factions join together under its complete control. Later, after achieving interstellar travel, it was discovered the Altaian DNA is mysteriously identical to Human DNA.

Their representative government is a sham, and both democracy and political freedoms are nonexistent in Kafair. Having only one political party that receives 100% of the vote (and that is ultimately controlled by the Sultan anyway) just to deflect issues of representation is akin to North Korea putting "Democratic" in its name to give the impression that it is actually democratic.

While Aletsandra IV became Empress in late March 2007 (ironically enough, on the day of Iranian new year too), she was not crowned and as such her rule can't be considered legitimate until more than a year later in April 2008. I hope we'll get more info on why later when the author writes more for that factbook.

They've recently made some PacificCon commemorative can designs, and the South Pacific is abbreviated as SPIT for some reason. It made me think of a make of canned meat currently associated with unsolicited e-mail ads.

AN: While the Puckle gun (an early prototype of a machine gun) was received somewhat reluctantly in Great Britain, the Romans were swift to adopt this new weapon and the other European powers (including, most ironically, Great Britain) followed suit.

Yes. The WW3 through full military actions (including land, air, navy and nuclear) has started in 2136. But the countries of the Slavic Union could afford simultaneously waging war, colonizing Mars and evacuating their people.

Aletsandra IV's rule is considered to be legitimate from the second she succeeded to the Imperial Throne on the 21st March, 2007 on the death of her father, Guilhèm III, as per Occitan Laws of Succession. On the matter of the coronation, it was held more than a year later because of the tradition of allowing an appropriate length of time to pass after a monarch dies before holding such joyous festivities. It also gave the planning committees adequate time to make preparations for the ceremony.

As for writing her factbook, I'll get there eventually! I have finally almost finished the General Overview factbooks at least, and the Empress and the Prime Minister are next on the list!

For AN: As could perhaps be expected from a state which shares its title with Mussolini's 1943-45 Italy, the ideology of the Tohorin Social Republic's ruling party has been described as a "watered down Tohorinese version of European fascism". That being said, the state has also been accused of being socialist as a result of its anti-imperialism. It's almost as if some sort of metaphor with a certain horseshoe could be used here...

Occitania is not incredibly homogeneous. While its "accepted" majority are of Latin origin, there are large Celtic and Germanic populations elsewhere. No actual information can be found regarding how many of those "108,422,362" white people are German, Breton, Occitan, French, or Catalan.
