All money is controlled by the state, so it would be considered unauthorized interference of government facilities, which is a minimum of 40 years imprisonment/"rehabilitation", or even death in more severe instances.

Depending on the animal and the danger it could pose you would get from highly irritated looks to 5 years in prison and a 5000 florin fine for potential endangerment.

They would be asked to leave, and if they don't obey, they would be given a fine. Protest is allowed, but not when it seriously disrupts people's lives.

It's illegal, but unless you started some sort of brick-and-mortar store doing it, it's very unlikely you'll face any punishment. The law states that the maximum punishment for this behaviour is a fine of up to $250,000. For context, the last time someone was charged for the specific crime of 'Illegal physical and digital reproduction of copyrighted materials via means of physical home media' was 2006.

Other people probably block your car in place with their own vehicles so that they can pull you out of it, remove and smash the device that you were using to play that song, and beat you up... and if you try to sue them then the most likely verdict is -- as our laws, in most of our separate jurisdictions, allow in Public Nuisance cases -- "He had it coming".

(Only if they inflict long-term damage on you, for example by force-feeding you the device's parts, are they likely to face any penalties ... although if they leave bits of the device or of the car scattered around then the authorities might charge them with Littering, and spilling its fuel without getting this promptly cleared up is a definite no-no under Fire Risk laws.)
