they have this interesting God-emperor people thing going on where some dude named Ghes was their Alexander the Great and Abraham of christianity but their religion involves skyworship where winds are omens and their grim reaper is this tornado dude who blows people's souls and scatters them so they can reconstitute as different souls with other deconstituted souls.

Their "history" starts in 2077, at which point a series of conflicts around the world occurred as powerful countries scrambled for whatever resources were left. Specifically, China fought Russia over control of Africa, European countries just fought each other like madmen, and the Free and Confederate States of America fought like hyenas over the corpse of the USA. And that's when the GATE-like stuff just get around to starting.

They are a parliamentary democracy under a King as well as being a limbstate of the ONN (Organisation of Nordic Nations) which is somewhat surprising as many in England today don't consider England Nordic despite history.

Inspired by ancient Sparta and Rome with fantasy elements. This is NOT Rome or Sparta.

Despite being a rather primitive system, they too tend to have liberals, who are fine with mingling with other cultures, and have conservatives, who like to keep to themselves.

In their timeline, the British Monarchy was abolished in the UK for some inexplicable reason in the 1990s, and so the British Royal Family has its seat in Adelania. Why didn't they move to the more proper Canada or Australia? :thunk:

Alicia somehow managed to replace an ineffectual Senate with a more ineffectual show-organ called the People's Hall. I can't imagine that one person could ever manage to address thousands of petitioners effectively, even if it is a good way to make the public think you're a kind, caring, down-to-earth person.

Their history seems to largely follow that of Britain, though Norse and Danish influences remained strong.

IF I READ THIS HISTORY BIT CORRECTLY (which is a significant qualifier), it looks like they were instrumental in breaking the rather extensive hegemony of the Hapsburg clan by removing France from their purview.

Significant Russian migration into Gandoor in the 19th century and later the alignment of Gandoor with the Russian-led Soviet Union during the Cold War means that there are roughly one Russian in every five people in Gandoor. Despite originally being an English colony, Japanese people are the largest ethnic group in the country.

I have learned two things about Gandoor's history:

The Great Depression had a minor effect on the Gandoorese economy, with unemployment reaching a high of 13% in 1932. However, due to Stevenson's economic policies, the economy swiftly recovered and Gandoor, along with Sweden, is considered one of the first countries to recover from the Depression.

So this is one of them, the fact that their economy, while it still suffered, was more of a not-too-great Depression for them, in all honesty. All thanks to their main man Stevenson, so that was good that they could avoid it when the entire world (more or less) was crapping their pants.

Petrikov's era as Prime Minister, known by Gandoorese historians as 'The Lost Era', were characterized by the severe curtailing of civil and political freedoms for all and Gandoor, during the time, was sometimes referred to as a authoritarian state. His goal, as stated in a private 1942 speech, was the transformation of Gandoor into an atheistic socialist single-party state ruled by his Revolutionary Socialist Party, which he formed that same year.

Kinda feels like what the Valentians have went through, what with Valentijn gaining more power until there was a split (in a good way) of the world. Of course, Valentine Z by all accounts is still an autocracy, but anyway, going back to Gandoor's stuff. I kinda see it coming, if I am honest? After a recovery state or some sort of a war/depression/recession/bad event affecting them, it's not unusual for a nation to start being authoritarian, though this is not always a bad thing. Sometimes, if lucky enough, the leader in question can still mean well despite being a single-person/single-party state.

AN: Learning about their languages and speech system, as I have read in the overview:

The bulk of Danelagers speak English. It is, apart from them, spoken by hundreds of millions of folk around the world, and as the first language of England it is spoken by 98% of the land's befolkling. It is upspringly an Indo-Europish tongue in the Anglo-Frisian bough of the Germanic family. It was created by the forbinding of Old Anglo-Saxon spoken by the Anglo-Saxons and the Old Norse spoken by the Danish incomers, and it soon took over as the first language of the land.

So I learned that they still speak English, but I can only wonder (and learn more) about whether or not their English is 1:1 with the English that we have OOCly in real-life, or does it have a lot more Anglo-Saxon English / Old English influence with them, less from the French and other Romance languages?

BN: You can pick any of mine, but in particular, I would like it if you talk about my stuff here: <https://forum.nationstates.net/viewtopic.php?p=34883406&sid=916896acc458bd0e44f90734dc8a36ef#p34883406>
