There's an entire history there that's actually pretty well fleshed out, not bad. I like the note about language, it's not something that's mentioned often. I guess because a good 70% of nations here are FT space empires...

They are divided into West Germany, The Prussian Republic and colonial states like Libyan State, Rio Grande and Ruanda-Urundi.

They are a nation of Slavs living on Mars, and, bafflingly, despite being socialist, have a king.

They love tea, guns, own the companies they work at, and do not have a standing army, relying on a workers militia.

Edit: The king, who is in a coma due to alcoholism, enjoys spraying members of parliament with a super soaker and playing with a flammenwerfer, when he isn't watching Hamlet.

There is a large region on the edge of the universe that consists of thousands of asteroids and stations and is an absolute nightmare of criminals, factions vying for power, cultists, and other such peoples. While there is the legate, the entire region is almost entirely anarchic with activities of both moral/legal and immoral/illegal taking place all over. This can be seen in The Golden Bazaar, which sells practically everything known to the universe including slaves, and the Violet Rose which is essentially an asteroid-sized speakeasy with drugs, gambling, and hookers.

It sounds like space Detroit, but it's interesting regardless.

AN: One of their 'semi-autonomous' regions is a large tract of land nearly 23 million square kilometers large with a population presumably very low. A big issue i have with this is that even if the population is so low, there's no need for a region that massive even if it's not being used for anything. Besides, unless there is some angry ethnic group not particularly happy with being apart of the federation that isn't described in the factbook I read, I don't really see the need for the region to be 'semi-autonomous', which is normally reserved for regions that aren't apart of the 'main' ethnic group.

Their ethnic population - called 'Wetlanders' for rather obvious reasons - are all descendants of pre-war Texans who rejected Catholicism and moved to a big great swamp to start a kingdom. Their ethnic religion, likewise, is an amalgamation of some local superstitions, old wives tales, and 'Americanism'. The Wetlanders also seem to have some Mexican heritage?

Correct, most wetlanders can trace their origins to both pre-event Texans and have both Latino and African-American ancestors due to how diverse many of the cities were both before and soon after the event.

~~Also, they didn't move to a swamp, the swamp just kinda grew around them~~

I don't think there was a WW2 in this world, instead we have the EU forming early, becoming hella nationalistic, and fighting both the US and the Soviets.

Kiu Ghesik is a nation of nomadic peoples who have, surprisingly, settled themselves in a cohesive national entity under the leadership of a powerful person, Oloughin son of Kemoughin. They have a very fascinating religion called "Holy Sky Worship".
