Assault with a deadly weapon, that might put you in prison for a few years, but if the person dies of his injuries you could face the death penalty for murder.

Depends, if it was like that case of a small child calling 911 over his school math problems then it's not a crime, but if you call over a fake "terrorism" threat, you'd be fined for the cost of the entire operative that was sent over, plus an extra and some prison time, and if somebody died as a result of the "prank" you could be charged with murder, which carries the death penalty.

I'll take this as "unlicensed gold mining" which warrants a small fine if done on Crown Territory and up to several weeks in local jail if done on territories belonging to either a private instance or a noble house/person.

You will be fined depending on the damage. If people die because of aircraft you will be in prison depending on how much people died (Example: one person dead equals two years in prison). (Sorry, I couldn't think of a crime)

Not a crime. How does one Harass an idea?

Harassing practitioners of a specific religion?

1 is a fine if $100 dollars to the parents (it under 18) over eighteens pay $200

The 3 are seen clearly with intention and so probably community service or in some cases a few months in jail
