They were neutral during the first world war, preferring not to get involved. The World Wars took umbrage at this, and so the second one got involved with them.

The Caleshan Valkyrie is made of several tribes with a single hierarchical leader amongst them known as a 'Cala', which is used as an official title in these lands.

A ruling Cala appears to have a similar status to a Roman emperor, with the title being a reward for great service to one's tribe, yet also the sacrifice of a lifetime.

While 'Woodlawn' held 'Wong Kong' for most of 156 years, the latter was granted independence in 1997. Whether it is a Commonwealth Realm or just some republican City-State along the coast of China I don't know.

They're made up of five separate holdings that have no formal agreement between them, and constitute the oldest and most populous colony of the Anglo-Danes.

Also, I think you missed a translation in that paragraph. You still have a 'colony' in there, instead of 'Overseagebede' which I think is the word you have taking its place?

The Caleshan people are a mix of quite a few otherwise disparate peoples, that being Scandinavians, Mongols, Arabs, and various Native American peoples. They also seem to have a solar cult. Very peculiar combination, but I like it.

Their 'religion' is based upon the complete worship of America's Founding Fathers (along with complete misinterpretations of history and white supremacist and racist elements as well) and is not practiced outside of their territory and is considered to be a dangerous cult to anyone outside of their territory.

The Evolved are powerful genetically-engineered shapeshifters made up of the Blacklight virus. They can turn their arms into spiky weapons, have stronger senses, mobility, and physical force compared to regular humans. They can also "consume" the minds of their impaled victims, know their every memory, and turn into their exact copy while still maintaining their usual abilities underneath.

Fyrn-Gaestron identifies itself as a "Peoples' Assembly". It is a relatively old republic, which was created out of a bloody civil war in the 19th century against a dictatorial monarchy under king Leofric II. It is a semi-direct democracy under the "People's Assembly", an all-citizen legislature where the "lower house" is made of the entire citizenry.
