Remember the 'CONDEMN DREW DURNIL' proposals because apparently bringing more people to this game is a bad thing lol.

RE for most threads: The reluctance or flat-out refusal to read a factbook or two (even the smaller ones), and instead just picking something randomly from a flag/avatar, or goodness forbid, not just NS Stats, BUT from the overview (especially Taxation, which maxes out at 100%).

Yes, it is awfully specific for a reason.

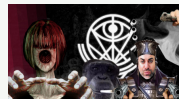

For the love of everything that is good, at least read something that others have written in their factbooks instead of going for the low-hanging fruits. Once is happenstance, twice is okay, but annoying. A few times more than 3 is... vexing.

Honestly I don't mind when people do that for a thread that specifies like 'based on the flag' but yeah doing it in threads where you're supposed to say something more is dumb.

(It's also doubly-annoying when people refuse to check your factbooks/RP info over on the RP boards. I don't think I've ever had it happen on this account, but the amount of times over on Gandoor where other players refer to stuff from my nation as 'Gandoorian' is like...well I think it's only happened a few times, but is it really that hard to just open my nation page and see that the demonym is Gandoorese lol?)

SCP Foundation knockoffs! You hate to see it. Practically every low-tier military-centric nation has one of these, whether it's literally just the original SCP Foundation whose lore they skimmed over so they could dump it into their nation for the sake of weaponising SCPs, or some proprietary top sekret "supernatural containment agency", which again serves almost entirely to stuff their SCP-equivalents into super spooky military applications. Bonus points if they use copious amounts of "[REDACTED]" to hide a lack of developed content.

I could've sworn I saw someone with an SCP nation with like ten million sections on military and it's all just unicode black squares. Shiny things that kill things, which makes it super scary. You hate to see it.

Most uprisings and revolutions will generally be carried out by communist guerrillas. Strangely, they break out in countries where a communist / Marxist movement cannot have any hook (poor population, strong disparity between classes, etc ...). But, even if they do, ordinary people will always be on the side of the government.

I guess it's just a player's excuse to show when he hates communism and wants to involve other players with his same opinion. Fortunately, their roleplays will never go too far.

Sigh....

Overpowered leaders who are beacons of democracy.
Overpowered leaders who are literal immortal death gods.
Overpowered leaders who win every single war in like two hours.
Overpowered leaders who should have died in that situation but are completely fine.
Overpowered leaders who lack even a single personality flaw.
Overpowered leaders who get away with everything.
Overpowered leaders who can defeat everyone else just by raising an eyebrow.
Overpowered leaders who speak 24 languages, graduated college at sixteen, are physically flawless, nationally ranked in some sort of athletic activity, are probably supermodels, are way to young to be democratically elected if they were, and also run a country on the side. And they initiate huge reforms for a light morning snack.

Nope! I have heard of card farmers with MUCH more than mine. 97 is comparatively a puny number, but I am not intent on boosting that number too hard unless I have a genuinely new idea.

Otherwise, I am quite burnt out with card farming, though I'm still up for it. Fun fact: I need to start farming again to have enough bank to gift Legendary cards for the F7 Factbook contest.
