I personally don't care if someone replies to someone who replied to them once. I only have a problem if they do it multiple times in a row because, at that point, you're really not giving anyone else a chance to participate in the thread, you know?

Also if a thread hasn't been replied to in at least a day or more I want to bring the thread back up, you bet your ass I'll reply to someone who replied to me. I'd rather do that than just posting 'bump' tbh.

Well, it is seen critically since it allows one to rate or give the comment about the guy that did you, which opens up for abuse of the threads purposes, like giving someone a bad rating because they gave you one.

A state where Slavery was strong, but the instructions were unclear. Now the Slaves control pretty much everything. The Masters meanwhile get mandatory pampering and don't have to worry about anything else. Post-Modern Tech.

I personally prefer to use a /bump & /skip if the last person to reply was someone who did for me, so that they can have the chance to be replied to by someone else.

Oh well, there is also a similar problem to this, although not very widespread: to answer the same even when you have nothing to say. And I'm not talking about low-effort responses. I'm talking about those who refuse, for some OOC reason, to comment on the post above them, but still want their post to be replied to. I mean, no one is forcing you to comment on that post if there is something bothering you. Leave that burden to someone else, then! Such a thing happened to me a couple of times in the thread to comment on videos.

These threads, the 'F7 controls x, y or z' games, really should stop. They are getting spammier and spammier because they are duplicates of the exact same game over and over again. We had at least one more posted today - the 10th in the last few days. I hope the mods do something about them

In literally less than 5 minutes 4 F7 control threads were made.

The thing is: they're not against the rules.

There's no rule that says 'Don't create trend threads' or anything like that.

I mean it's still kind of annoying, like creating low effort posts aren't gonna get you banned, they're frowned upon.

I think they should count as spam. They are all clones of each other. The fact that each of those threads lack unique rules to define them, set them apart or in any way distinguish them from each other I think indirectly renders them insufficient OP.

At the very least, they are spammy in how much they are clogging up F7 while contributing little to forum culture and content diversity

In all honesty, as spammy might it may be, these are pretty okay for a place like F7, speaking as someone who is here for a relatively long span, albeit missing out a lot.

I'm definitely aware that there is quality over quantity, and F7 still is a home to games where you simply count up or down.

The problem is saturation. I wouldn't mind if a "Man" thread made even 100-200 pages and got pretty interesting along the way. But seeing A LOT of these at the same time and then dying after not even filling up a single page? Yeah, that's market saturation, as we call it in the trades.

In short: No problem with threads like "Count to 1000". Problem begins when there are so many such threads with little change being spawned for goodness knows why.

/ Obligatory not-a-mod over what's allowed and not but hey, these "Count up", "Monkey genocide", and "Man" Threads have been around for quite some time - some new, some old. But we really ought to stop spawning too many, hah.

The 'insufficient OP' rule doesn't apply to F7 and why would it?

See I think a problem a lot of the newer posters here in F7 have is that y'all are treating F7 as something more than the ultimately disposable forum where people can just chill out and play some forum games.

Like the obvious solution to the saturation of certain game types is simple: Don't click on them and just ignore them.

No one is forcing you to view or participate in these threads.

Aw come on now, F7 doesn't have to be 'the ultimate disposable forum' 🤔. I see a lot of potential in F7. I do ignore those threads by not commenting on them. But I think when 10 of those posts happen in a matter of days, there should be some discussion on content saturation. Because I think F7 could be - and usually is - a great place for some cool and fun games, but lately (maybe it's just me) it's gotten a little... wild wild west in here with the cosmic threads. Idk

It is the "ultimate disposable forum" tho. Most new players find themselves in this forum, and most of the most new players are low efforters who don't know squat about NS.

Sometimes I wonder if it'd have been better had F7 not been created and just remained an in-joke for people who'd been playing this game since the OG forums (which wouldn't include myself, to be fair).

We are honestly just looking at this from a very negative angle. Okay, maybe I should mention that I'm not wearing very heavily rose tinted glasses, but even with all its flaws and the craziness that happens within, I would feel sad if F7 wasn't around and I didn't get to meet you guys. ♥◻

And yes, even after efforted posts both here and elsewhere, I have finally embraced this place as just somewhere to chill regardless of the replies I get.

You could make an argument that there are other subforums we can meet on, but rather here than anywhere else, eh.

Edit: Although admittedly, if F7 or the whole of NS got yeeted due to some unforeseen circumstances, I'll have a drink in honour of the friends and weird stuff we did, then I move on and create a blog or some fluff.

Not the 'Dismiss Issue' option but the old 'Dismiss All Issues' where you could get rid of all your unanswered issues if you had more than one.
