After all, political ideologies matter little to witches of high stature~ It's also perfect for a witch to have many friends who share the aptitude required for magic~ This Oomiya is a rather powerful magic user too. As a high standing witch, I have to give my respects to anyone who can match certain levels of sorcery and witchcraft. Ohoho, I'm sure little Sylvie and Julie will get along quite well with her. "Ahh, what do we have here? Nazi anime girls with magical abilities? The first part is acceptable, the others, not so much. These are nationalists who do oppose socialism and communism, so they are politically aligned with our state, but I'm not very fond of their other qualities. Practicing witchcraft automatically cancels out any nationalist or traditionalist political views as heresy and purity cannot coexist. While we do share a mutual hatred of communism, The Kancian Government as well as the State Church considers modern Japanese media as degenerate. Also the fact that they led anything called the '666th Magical Kampfgruppe' is unnerving to me for certain reasons. I guess we do share a mutual love for classical music, but I personally wouldn't encounter any of the twins, unless they provide us with useful ways to crush the commie scum currently dissenting against me."

I find that she has put such immense trust in her people, enough to maintain her nation's full democracy and parliament system. "Ah, Premier Miroslavsky. I am indeed familiar with him; he is quite stoic, is he not? A very calculating man and shrewd politician who somehow manages to convince the public that he has it together, which I would say he does. I have seen him get close to losing his temper on a few occasions, and I will admit I am intimidated by his manner and stature, but there is something to be said in his not being a complete mess externally after all he has endured. Torture is completely inhumane, and I--has he heard of the Code of Hammurabi? He would appreciate it, I feel, at least in the literal sense. And he understands the concept of moderation for things like smoking and drinking. He can control his faculties and his power. Miroslavsky knows exactly how much to drink, when to refrain from aggression, and how to conduct himself in political settings. It is as though he was born to be in his position, personality wise."

"Amaki is someone I think is...not absolutely terrible. Let me explain. She's embraced a path of authority and order. Now, she'll say that this is just because of the circumstances, and I believe her. After all, she does still say democracy is better in peace, for some reason. But that she has brought herself to do what she has is something worth mentioning. She's obviously depressed. Even Sawagi isn't this bad most of the time. But can I blame her for that? To have everything you've worked for under threat, to endure relentless brutality...I can't say that's not something I've felt. Her situation is terrible. I have no idea what a...prethoryn...? Is. But something tells me it's not exactly pleasant. With all that said...this is what I have to say to you, Amaki. Your situation is awful. Yeah. But do think about what you still have. Your daughter, for one thing...but more than that, an entire refuge, an entire sanctuary under your command. You're probably stressed out as all heck. I understand that. But you survived. You still have so much potential. I know you probably hate me. Think that my efforts at oppression are self-indulgent displays of sadism and madness. I get that a lot. But when it comes to the end, when oblivion seems moments away...know this. Order prevails. Take solace in that, if you can."

Anyways, we can't talk about her edge all day - now to the rest of info."

So my opinion is actually fairly negative in all honesty. I'm sure they're better than I give them credit for, but I just can't respect anything that daims revolution when there is none. Not one of the future or the present, but of ages long left behind. Like the First Era, but without the magic and the...well. I can't be too harsh on her for the sole reason that I spent part of my life in a similar state. Not commanding raids, but partaking in them. Ancient chaos. I've moved on from that. And what Ari does...sure, she's not sedentary, but is she really chaotic? She's doing her best to gain more power for herself, isn't she? That's an orderly thing to do. It's all a matter of perspective, and much as I may hate some of what she embodies...can I expect any better from her? I will not condone the rampant assaults on her neighbours, sure. I will not pretend she is especially orderly or even especially authoritarian. But I do recognise the kind of effort she is making, and I cannot criticise her solely for not settling somewhere. How odd. Do you like parfait, too?

The Phoenix is one of the most complex leaders of a foreign nation I have ever seen. In his several billions of years of existence, he has no doubt seen, experienced, and understood greatly- I am many centuries old, of course, but his age is to mine what mine is to a normal human. I believe that his experiences - many of which shaped him towards his present ideals- have led to his leadership being mostly one of attempted benevolence, his hands-off approach to domestic policy is certainly respectable, as is his emphasis on individual freedoms and offering all persons the essential right to self-determination. His approach towards the foreign affairs of preferring peace if and whenever possible is also wise, although not at all unexpected from an ancient being like him. However, I cannot understand why he continues down the broken and flawed path of limited regulation and free-market capitalism, and his odd stance towards monarchy. Perhaps there is something in their universe that is fundamentally different from our own.

Valentijn "De Sierlijke en Vrij Valkyrie General ov Valentine Z" Samantha Maxwell Delta Weston Stijn Angelus Tracey Mitchell Tristian Mamix Basilisk Lewis Hyatt X. Constantine Sein Lin Zaw Naing: Ohh, hello there, my little friend. Quite a pleasure to see and meet you again. You have such a positive outlook on us, so for that, I would like to thank you for that first and foremost. Now, about yourself - I find yourself positive in almost every aspect, maybe save for being the armed citizens bit. This one is... okay, this one is actually very debatable. I am not one to incite violence on my own populace, but I do feel that they should, when the needs arise, should at least be experienced with firearms and the like. After all, soldiers and police can do the defensives, but the citizens must also be able to defend themselves. I have rambled too much on that particular topic, so as for the rest of the subject, I am more or less fine. You definitely should see Gwen during your travels and life, I am assuming. I mean, in the 860 years that you have been around, I am sure that she has visited your universe and looked around at the marvels of the place!

"I can't bring myself to dislike Valentijn - not in good conscience. He is one of the kindest, most supportive individuals I have ever met. He means well in his leadership. He isn't perfect, but who is? His personality and his demeanour all make up for it. It would be proud to call Valentijn my friend. I know we haven't had the best start, but... I feel safe enough to let him into my life. Just... as long as he isn't so big he collapses the roof."

"Yarr, if thar ain't a sadder tale this side o' the Galaxy. Poor lass... arr, but there be no needs fer me to drown in pity. I believe Amaki here has the qualities any good Captain or whatever ye wants to call it should 'ave. She be one o' th' strongest-willed lasses I 'ave seen. 'N puts the ship she's steerin' on before herself! Somethin' even some o' me fellow 'brethren' refuses t' do. By Davy Jones' Locker, judgin' by her war tales, she was just as willin' to go down wit' the ship if necessary. Arrrr... that did lead to her bein' in her current situation though... tis' a shame. Regardless, I shall be raisin' me glass to ye tonight lass. Ye might nah care, but ye got me respect, even if we do sail two different routes in this endless ocean we call life."
