The lack (?) of cliches? MLP and centaurs, yes. I know Azur has some, but damn, centaurs don't really get a lot of screentime here.

As for MLP... well, I am not asking for one, but you know, that was something I expect to be a boatload of.

How do they do that?

Hey hey, LP here: Too burnt out with this nation to make new lore or fix macrohistorical longue durée alt-his inconsistencies, too clingy to let it die.

Noticeably cliché but not crazy common: (One shot if you fall into any of these)

Cliché but not THAT cliché: (Two shots for these)

- Nordic takeover (I fall into this one too)

Surprised I didn't fall into more of these clichés.

*Blanjiland isn't a messed up Sweden, but we do share a universe with one.

I think a good addition to this list would be world hegemon/superpower, whether it's economic/cultural/military, this nation seems to get special attention from other countries and follow their guidance blindly. Blanjiland falls under this category as its world's largest economy.

The inverse of this is also pretty common, with the cliché nation in question being pretty irrelevant on the world stage, but still gets overwhelming attention from their world's superpowers. I find this less annoying because this was basically the norm during the Cold War, but it's still a cliché nonetheless.

Edited and added the superpower cliché. I have not really seen too many nations dependent on a world power yet but it might just be my luck, although I have seen too many island nations that somehow exceed in advancement despite being isolationist so I'll add it.

How do they do that?

They take this quote:

"The races different from humans comes from magical research conducted by Germany during the Second World War."
and run with it, usually referencing Josef Mengele or so.
Like, no, this isn't supposed to be the grotesque invasive surgery stuff. This is just supposed to be like a fantasy magical girl transformation thing.

Why have catgirls when you can have.... yknow.... cats?

Hello. It's Zitravgrad. Y'all can stop talking about cats on my main now.

An AU in which Gaiaverse is run by sentient cats, humans never existed and cat civilizations somehow progressed to the point that Zitravgrad existed. Run by the meowvolutionary leader Katzimir Meowroslavsky. There will be factbooks which are parodies of my main nation's factbooks.

Be that as it may, regions with MLP nations are there, they just don't actively participate here in the RP forum (much to my chagrin).

I wouldn't be opposed to it, as long as magic were used reasonably.

That's a cliché that we... kind of fall into? Yeah, we may be pretty good in the tech department despite being an island nation, but that's A. pretty much entirely military technology, and B. how it came to be is explained quite a lot in our history, so I don't think much of it.

In WF's defense, it was quite behind the tech curve for most of its history.

Faster travel and the Internet definitely helped bring it up to speed.

If not for LP where would Dark Lord Elon Musk get his Gaddafi-esque bodyguards?

I mean if you go by the rule of Catverse, everyone is a cat.

Funny. I would've imagined the "magical portal" Hellboy route or something. Or "isekai portal" if we're gonna take the weeb stuff up to 11. Not that I care. I wanna do that in Tohorin.

Those are some pretty good ideas too. I just wanted to have it where a mage's willpower allowed her to grow wings and become a harpy or something.

Having a good explanation is always a benefit, normally I see nations that should be like the modern day Philippines ending up like something out of Halo.

Military scenarios which are completely inaccessible to normies, as they inevitably attract people who know worrying amounts about military hardware and the use thereof so they can fence with their realism boners over reams and reams of technicalities and jargon.
