Time in jail is determined upon the amount of money stolen that was listed on the court paper - say if they stole two million dollars, they get two years in prison. If they stole below a million dollars jail time is upgraded to a minimum 1 year in jail and a fine no more than $100 million.

Conspiracy.

No texts are illegal at this time, but there's a precedent from during the American Civil War which means it might be punishable by internment, house arrest, a fine up to $250,000 and imprisonment for between 2 months and 2 years.

If the victim presses charges, that'd be battery which carries a punishment of up to six months prison for first offenders and/or a 4,000 guilder fine. Though, given it was an accident, the judge would likely be lenient of the perpetrator.

/ninjas!!!!

Pay a fine of the retail value of the items stolen which is given to the store, plus a 10% extra fine which is paid to the city. On repeat offenses, up to three month jail time is a possibility.

Typically for petty vandalism, the offenders would be given an official warning for the first offence, and then five days in a Social Rehabilitation Programme for each subsequent offence, adding five days each time. (10 days for the second, 15 for the third, etcetera)

It's a crime that is seldom enforced, but a light fine with the except of when it has endangered people's lives or caused death. Then a lengthy prison sentence is likely.
