What do you mean that it isn't a glorious display of chauvinistic ideals?

Cliche: There's always some kind of freedom being "sacrificed" in exchange for something else, be it security or prosperity. (Ex. Technate democracy removing the electorate's freedom to vote for whatever they desire).

Y'all ever get angry TGs from someone you reported because they're mad that you reported them for something?

I got one on Gandoor some hours ago from the dude I reported for saying they were 11 years old in the true/false fact thread lmao.

This I find funny given its a country trying to declare a holy war... Without a military factbook or any one specific target. Like, I get it, big scary nation with a title that makes it look like you're out to destroy the rest of NS.

... In all reality its just a poorly written joke. Plus this falls in line with the cliché of deeply religious countries trying to reunite NS under one banner as if repeating the crusades are viable in a social game.

That user is from 2004 and, after briefly checking their topic history to see if they had a forumside military factbook (cuz remember gameside factbooks are a relatively recent addition to the game [ok nearly 10 years old but dammit they weren't here when I joined in 2008 so nyeh]) I was reminded of a vintage cliché:

'How would your citizen survive in my nation' threads.

That was a classic F&N staple back in the day and it's exactly what it sounds like. People would reply telling OP about a citizen of their own nation and the OP would reply and tell them what would be the fate of them if they moved to the OP's nation.

Honestly, I barely keep track of my own replies to those threads that ask things like "What's your nation's nuke program like?" and such... Even if I'm only arsed to reply for my own amusement.

Your eyes must be tricking you because nobody's been DEAT'd within a few weeks.

The only hot take that's true.

In other things, does anyone else find it weird that activity in the International Incidents area has mostly stagnated? Or is it just me? Given there doesn't seem to be that much activity outside of closed threads and threads that are limited by either region or tech level (or both).

I can't believe you just eviscerated my entire nation in one sentence anyways, I've been seeing a lot of WW2-German/German based nations recently, and most of em have been high quality but I've always wondered why France never seems to get the same treatment.

Because people can't find a reason to glorify France, much less bother with them entirely, viewing them as just a weak country that was stomped out in less than a day... Which is far from the truth, but it's a lie that's far too popular to disprove.

Same reasons why there aren't a lot of nations about WW2 Greece, Yugoslavia, China, Australia, Bulgaria, etc. While their soldiers all fought, they are considered minor in the eyes of people with a very loose view of WW2 - which is most people. Which is kinda a shame, because these nations and their people (regardless of their actual government or cause) still fought hard and it would be interesting to see the war (or an equivalent one) from their perspective.

As for why Germany instead of France in general, I blame HOI4/History Channel for creating an army of GenZ Wehraboos/Kaiserboos (Wehraboos in denial).
