Depends on what's done with it afterwards. If it's given to a human deliberately with intent to kill then, depending on the state of mind, remorse etc and the result of a risk and reformability assessment anywhere between 3 years and life, and potential sanctions on voting rights.

Just for putting poison in the cheese though? Nothing, but possibly public ridicule for poisoning your own cheese.

Killing a dog.

Varies with circumstances.

If it can be verified that it was self-defense, a 1% fine paid to the dog's owner, if there is one. (Fines in Ryemarch are based on the guilty party's net worth OR upon the cost in question, whichever is higher.)

If deliberate cruelty was involved and it's their first offense, jail time with rehabilitative therapy, plus a 5% fine paid to the owner, if there is one.

If deliberate cruelty was involved and this is not their first offense, a 100% fine paid to the owner (if there is one) and the guilty party is executed in the same manner as the dog.

Declaring your house a independent nation from your country?

Juansonia does not recognise the sovereignty of any state, polity, "nation", or similar entity within its borders, barring agreements such as those relating to embassies. In most cases of "my house is independent from Juansonia", the punishment is a simple lack of recognition and continued enforcement of Juansonian law.

Even without IRL current events, that would be bleeding the Ryemarchi economy to fuel a foreign power. Jail with rehabilitative therapy, and while in jail the guilty party is required to work. All wages are confiscated by the government. When the confiscated wages reach ten times the amount sent to the Kremlin/Putin, the guilty party is released.

The patient will be monitored for health complications stemming from the surgery.

If there are none, no punishment.

If there are any, the guilty party pays a fine of 30% of their net worth (or 30 times the value of the medical procedures required to correct the complications, whichever is greater) to the patient.

If the patient dies, the guilty party's net worth is paid to the patient's next-of-kin, and the next-of-kin may select a method of execution for the guilty party. If none is selected, the guilty party is beheaded.

If the patient is the guilty party, no direct punishment, but any complications will not be treated nor paid for by Ryemarch.

For most cases, you will be allowed to escape prison. However, if you are seriously dangerous or pose a threat to society, humanity or Earth, (people like Samara Yoshida, Hitler, or Ariel Castro) or you will be tracked down, imprisoned with further, more secure measures and more years will be added on to your sentence.
