"According to the notes left to me by Chairwoman Ōriya before she left for vacation, it is recommend for me to write occasional reviews of other leaders from various multiverses: Well, if the Chairwoman was able to, I suppose I can do the same, can't I?"

Ambassador Mizushima understands how to balance her own desires-political and otherwise-with her duty to the nation, which is something I find laudable. Her steady advancement in rank, particularly somewhere with a democracy as convoluted and bureaucratic as Baizou's speaks to her ability to consistently and correctly judge both her position and that of her fellow lawmakers. Finally, her willingness to support those overcoming the same discrimination as she did during transition, is one example of many that speaks to her nature as someone who does what all officials ought to: serve their nation's people wholeheartedly. I have no criticisms towards her character nor career so far, both of which appear as unblemished as any politician may hope for.

Of course, I do have my own disagreements with the Ambassador particularly with her stance on reform within the state apparatus as a means of achieving socialism, and her failure to reach out to the revolutionary Socialist Party during the coalition forming period. But I am confident she has been careful to apply Marxist theory to Baizou's material conditions, and an intellectual like her must have concluded with good reason that Baizou is perhaps not yet ready for the removal of the state machine.

In summary, I find Ambassador Mizushima to be quite an interesting figure, and I can somewhat understand the Chairwoman approval of her.

Wait, that doesn't seem quite right. I am the Acting Chairwoman for now, so...anyway you know what I mean!

"Granses? Wavecrasher? What a name. I'm being serious here, Granses is a genuinely pleasant surprise in an otherwise mundane pool of onomastic banality. Anyways, I won't dwell on it. Now, what can I say about Granses? Well firstly, as a bit of a structural visionary myself, I respect the hell out of his dedication and poise for naval engineering. I'll admit, I'm not an expert when it comes to ships, but it doesn't take a Poindexter to recognize that it's a trade requiring a massive amount of specialized skill and knowledge. So kudos for that, darling. As for how this hombre handles himself as a person, I really can't find any reason to say he's anything other than friendly, if perhaps a bit cunning and slick in his social strategy. But I mean, can you really blame him for that? Call me zealous, but if some blockhead thinks he can go back on his word nonchalantly, then it's a virtual obligation for the world to make an example out of him. That being said though, I appreciate that Granses at least considers the diplomatic approach, if not at the very least for leverage purposes."

"While I'm on the subject of teaching lessons, I should probably also extend my applause for Granses' efforts within the realm of education. It's a noble pursuit, truly, and for a religious delegator to take such a pursuit into his own hands shows a lot of character. Granses isn't perfect, that's for damn sure, but I think children have a lot to look up to him for, and I hope that he will continue his educational activity into the future, as I think it suits him well."

"What can I possibly say about the man? The government body he is a part of is quite unusual in its structure. His policies likewise are highly unorthodox. I don't think I've ever seen anything quite like them. Pensions for everyone? That sounds strange indeed. And what is this support for 'private' healthcare? Isn't all healthcare private? I can't say I've ever seen it done any other way, though the current model has a lot of problems. Likewise, some of the things Lord Abigail opposes are equally unusual. What is with this hatred of religion? I understand, religion can be difficult to address, believe me I know that all too well. But outright opposition? You don't want any sacred warriors taking up arms to defend you from other sacred warriors? See, I don't understand that. But the strangest thing of all is Lord Abigail's opposition to smoking. Everyone smokes, it's normal behavior. Why would anyone be against smoking? What, does he hate drinking too?"

THANK THE LORDS this'll be way less much of a hassle, I like Skull bois, we could go be evil and have some freaking nice Halloween costumes, nothing but full size candy bars for the two of us.

But jokes aside I thought skull lord would be a lot different than he seems, I mean he understands that he has that evil look but he seems pretty understandable when he actually talks, nothing at all like i imagined him to sound like. Almost reminds me of myself, but even I talk about the warrior ways of Lowbloods.

I kinda figured he'd be somewhat crazy like that too, and im most positive he is, I mean, skull king, you already got a nice name"-Luden

"I miss them too. It was always nice to see Low, such a valiant fighter, even possessing cursed armor to fight alongside our troops. Its always interesting to see some younglings walk up and fight like him. It always makes me think he's training someone to overthrow me. But the boy actually holds high respect for me as does the former king. As for Oni he's currently watching over his legion. But more so he's occasionally seen in the garden, tending to the plants, making patterns in the sand, and more so keeping the place nice. It was the place he fell. Too bad we weren't around for the festival, perhaps I'll host a second one as it wasn't much of anything before hand. Almost a joke. They also have the same respectable attitude, which is why Luden reminds me so much of them, but they are not the same person. Even though our interactions have been slim, I certainly have no intention of keeping it that way. My only concern is that Luden has domestic issues with people and organizations in his own nation that want to see him deal because of what he is, hopefully he is able to sort them out long before they get a chance at him. Oxton Arielle Lindall Leslie Vitesse Allison: See, there is a good reason why I am not really fond of her, and it was that she does not seem to trust anyone around herself, while all about being controlling. It's super weird, because for someone who does not trust a lot of things, she seems to be unconditionally accepting of the Swarm. I will give it that, she does have a good reason to be paranoid and spying, because what happened to her parents was... yeah, there was just no words for that. The espionage thing is cool, I will give it that! The rest, I will put this under "properly paranoid" but I am not sure if she is going to have an actual heartfelt talk with someone before they get impaled on one of her claws. I'm shockingly neutral on her.

"Why would I talk with someone I'm going to kill? It is an inefficient waste of time, calories, and several breaths of oxygen. Just kill them and start recycling their nutrients already. The killing them step can be skipped if they are a small enough threat to save on time though."

"I remember hearing stories of Gwen all the way back in the early years of my first incarnation. They were such fantastical stories and I loved them. However, I never truly believed that all of them could possibly be real. Only now do I know better. In fact, her legacy extends farther than I could have ever imagined. After becoming the Lord President I was given unrestrained access to the Matrix, the collective knowledge of my entire race. In it, I found an entire section dedicated to the Chief Aviator alone. The more I learn of her the more I want to meet her face-to-face. Or maybe I have long ago. If that is the case then I'd like to meet her again"

"Ah, The Phoenix, Since i have heard his opinion on me, I am happy to say that i think positively in return. Has it really been that long since we last met? even though, we didn't talk much even then, but it is good to finally have something to write back on. a share that he has had problems with his homeland being affected by warfare, though i am sure i can make the time to assist him with the reconstruction efforts since he seeks it. I am not one to turn down an opportunity to restore things to their former beauty. as for the phoenix himself. it seems as though he is still similar to his first in some ways, his pro environmental revitalization is probably the biggest thing that will really get us working together, since it is something i have a lot of joy in doing myself. All in all, I quite like him, id be happy to visit even just for the company as he would like!"

"When was the last time i made a remark about Sera? but nonetheless..the Exarch is more along the lines of someone whom i would see as a friend due to her modest and befriendng personality..politically i see her as a potential ally to meet in the world of politics. I do however hold pity in her emotions since i could probably understand her reasoning as to why. But enough of that.. Exarch Sera is a ruler of a Nation that will prosper under her guidance." - Charles Von Roland, Grand Emperor of the United Imperium
