If they can prove they are financially secure enough to stay here - a house, steady job, etc.- nothing? They just become an official migrate. Otherwise deported to wherever they have a citizenship of. If they're a refugee from their "home country", again, nothing. They can stay here. In both cases, the government will keep oversight over them to a degree for the next few years.

How the f*ck did you manage to do that?

Independently, can probably fall under criminal misshandling of animals, which in itself involves a fine and jailtime, but if people are hurt by this you'll be fined for the medical bills of all those you injured plus an extra for each one, so you more than likely can't afford that fine...

It used to be punishable by death, lest the government had failed its citizenry as outlined by Fundamental Law Article VII Section 7.6, as this punishment was outlined in Article VII Section 8. This was however repealed in 1998 by the 13th Amendment.

~~Probably imprisonment for a year and a heavy fine. Most punishments would be less severe, but there's really no way to defend theft of a tank.~~
