I mean I doubt that anyone in these alliances is capable of doing much in the means of account hacking for obvious reasons.

Honestly I just avoid those threads now -- they're incredibly annoying.

If by any chance you see an alliance forming and the OP itself is... lacking substance, it's best to wait it out and see them either be:

- Developed and matured more along the way, having a better ground on their region, constitutions as member nations, etc.
- Or fading into obscurity, ending off and at worst, getting banned with nothing but a few one-liners as their only legacy.
- Occupying a middle ground, having quite a decent and developed lore, but they flare up into trouble. 50-50 on whether you should get involved or leave.

I mean there's always the fourth option where they just keep on going without really making much of an improvement.

The annoying thing is that this nonsense has driven some rather puerile OOC drama that'd really get on my nerves if I cared enough about the FLAs.

Heh, FLA. Reminds me of FLAC - Free Lossless Audio Codec. Anyway, that banter aside, yeah I would rather that there is no fighting from just about anywhere, except maybe ICly fighting.

The important thing is to just stop when the other guy tells them to. No proxy wars, nothing. They wanted no part of it, and they certainly won't be amused by having a thousand nukes dropped.

I don't know if this gets into cliché territory, but for those who has characters, do you have those moments when you really, REALLY love the character you recently remembered or created, and you used them throughout most appropriate interactions? That is, you just dedicated A LOT of that air/screen time for them because hey, they are cool, they are new by me. I know I have that trope/cliche, and I am proud.

This is what annoys me the most. If you look in the moderation forum there's a bunch of report threads on the first page over some inane OOC drama with these alliances. Not to mention they start war RPs targeting players without their consent for OOC reasons.

Yeah. I remember one of those nations in a thread saying he was fighting a war because a nation pissed him.

Ah! Yeah, that's always the best! They feel like they've got so much life to them, just waiting to be explored, and I always wonder how they'll end up interacting with other peoples' characters. But on the opposite end, there's the old characters that, despite however much you might like them or want to use them on the forums, you just never get around to fully fleshing them out...I still wanna develop Theolivia, I just can't seem to!

I wonder how often that happens?

Not even a WIP yet, just trying to figure out what this nation'll be like.

I know I did that a lot with Kako, to the point she even got so through of a revamp she became my to-go character for forum 7 (And became an actual voice in my head), along with the Ozpin expy I made. They've both become the characters I use the most in F7, and I don't regret it cause they're great characters to RP as (Or whatever happens when I post as Kako, voice in my head and all).

With three nations (soon to be four) mostly centered around the narrative of a single character I've created, I might be guilty of this one.

The brilliance of that day never fades from our memory.

I'm doing it with Nova, who is, IMO, a decent human being and an all around fun individual I'd like to hang out with.

if I re-boot/overhaul Las Palmeras and it's characters, which I'm already doing in rough drafts and sketches, I plan on doing something similar with Montse...though maybe not as much and for the opposite reasons. Lots of posters accuse her of murder or being capable of it, I may as well make her do it. Maybe. I'll definitely make her attempt it once.

Which is more Mary Sue:

- Having a nation that seemingly has very little problems (or whatever ones they do have are so minor they can get fixed easily)

- Having a nation where they seem to always talk about how it's the best nation in the world (even with its flaws) and it's so much better than literally every real world nation and every other nation looks at it with jealousy

Fuck's sake, definitely the latter. I hate it when people answer on the forums "Stanier isn't better than My Nation" when talking about either broad terms or small nitpicks even when they're posting as a regular citizen. Sounds like I'm reading someone from North Korea even when the nation is supposed to be this haven of freedom and individuality that's been overdone to death.

I hope I don't fall into any of these categories, I wrote (or at least I tried to write) Cavirfi in a way that it has one flaw that is fixable, but the politicians don't want to fix in fear this would collapse the country; A lack of Democracy.

It comes as somewhat easy for me, but maybe because Las Palmeras is a middle-power dependent on allies and trade partners to actually be remotely useful. And because I'm re-writing some details this week. For example:

Not sure if my advice is worth something, but try to think about how to show your strengths by emphasizing your weaknesses to deter them. And also, it helps to not write your lore's enemies as idiots 100% of the time.

This is basically the guiding premise of my nation... XYZ thing that I'd actually *like* to do is too utopian for one reason or another, or I just don't trust myself to cover it without too much bias, so instead I look for the worst thing I can justify and go from there.

Is people posting completely crazy crimes in the 'Your nation's punishment for the above crime?' thread a cliché that's been mentioned.

I mean I get it, be a bit boring if everyone just says things like 'Your nation's punishment for murder/assault/fraud/carjacking/whatever' but I feel there's also a huge gap between 'What is your nation's punishment for murder?' and 'What is your nation's punishment for dancing around naked while covered in snail slime in front of your nation's legislature while singing about how you're such a pretty princess and throwing the equivalent of $100 bills to all passers-by?"
