Leader - Kamile

"Kamile and I have known each other for quite a while now and both of us share similar opinions of one another. i am happy to consider her as a friend on both a personal and professional level. that being said, i would like to officially make an offer of a declaration of friendship between our two nations. I do believe that both of us can maintain a mutually beneficial relationship that would last for eons, considering that we both strive for what is best for our people. I am also hoping that Kamile is one that cares for the environment as well considering her kind nature. however i would wait to hear that from her directly."

Leader - King Josephus Schmidt XII

"Hrm... I cant help but feel disappointment from someone who chooses not to at least make some effort in giving their opinions on other leaders. all there is about him is his history in warfare and says nothing about his policies and ideologies. My opinion is disappointingly empty and neutral until I see more information on him"

I guess that is just luck at this point, haha! Well, I mean, I don't mind meeting you, of course. In fact, I am happy that we have met, and that we are more or less friends at this point. You have a lot of good things going on with yourself, and I am happy to find someone such as yourself whose only intent is to help the people around her, and to make sure that the cosmos and the universe is balanced. Though of course, you must be familiar with the heat death and eventual Fate of our worlds, yes? Nothing stays forever. Oh no, not you. I know about you. I just mean that if this world collapses... you might want to run off to another world. I can give you a list of stable and familiar universes. [She takes out a list and starts pointing a few here and there] This one is good... this one's not bad, but the gravitational constant is a bit screwy. Oh, avoid this one! Trust me, your atoms and your body will not like it there... Ah, this is my favorite universe. It's nearly close to what we have, AND it is 10 times more stable! Oh yeah, stay away from this one. It's not bad, but everything is red-shifted so much and most of it is infrared or radio waves. I can't see a damn thing in that place, it's super dark. Anyway, you can take it with you, no worries! I have a master list with me. Oh, right, positive on you too, of course, I can't forget that. You have been a friend through and back for many of the Valentians, including me, and this is something that I will not forget in my travels. Wishing you all the best with everything you do!

"Well, this should certainly be interesting. And I promise I'm not using the royal 'interesting' here, I'm genuinely very interested. Anyone with such a fabulously long-winded name is virtually obligated to be interesting by the laws of periphrastic irony...(Pauses)...I er...think? In any case, what a skill set! This woman is a veritable swiss army knife of para-military and politico-organisational aptitude. I certainly wouldn't want to be staring down the barrel of that railgun, that's for sure. Her pulse bomb is certainly nothing to sneeze at either while we're on the subject of weaponry.

I'm curious however as to how useful this would be in close range situations, as it seems...I don't know...aggressive? Destructive maybe? Certainly sensible when the goal is to cause the most damage humanly possible per cubic metre of earth, that's for sure. Honestly, could actually be fairly useful when I think about it."

*"Speaking of measurement, why the f*ck would anyone choose to use centimetres to represent such a gargantuanly massive height? It's just such an arbitrary measurement for the given context, it's like as if someone tried measuring a wading pool in fathoms. Anyways, I won't dwell on it. In fact, let me get down to brass tacks, here: Gwen is a capable, truly unblenching soldier, with a daring heart and a level head, and you know what, that's already a hell of a lot more than I can say about myself. There's not much more to say really, she's a pro...and I pity anyone who finds themselves on the other side of those dual pistols."*

"Ahh so fate has it I attempt to state my opinion on this man, hopefully no ninjas are around, sneaky fiends.

Theodor is a strange man, when i often times think of a leader of his caliber I always find myself looking at some calm man with a sturdy set of feet ready to listen and calmly respond to just about anything.

When I see him, he'll comment on just about anything, but his attitude is something I find myself enjoying, after all he speaks with a silver tongue, with spicy vocabulary it keeps me hooked.

Im sure his people listen well to a speech he presents because he has that trait that he can make a conversation about paint drying on a wall sound so much more interesting. At least that's what I think of him, our interactions are fairly thin so I can't say all the world about him, I guess we'll know as we interact." - Luden

When people look to you for something, what do they expect?"

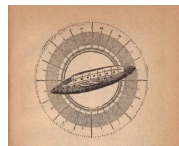

"I only ask because all impressions point to 'just stuff', and that actually worries me. You have such power, but it feels like there is no overarching goal. Power without purpose can be enormously destructive even in conventional terms, and your capabilities are hardly conventional. I guess it all boils down to the fact that I can't comprehend what exactly is going on, and truly it frightens me." -Cala Granses Wavecrasher more sublime ruler. All joking aside, it is far too often that am I presented with these same old flawless exemplars of leadership, supposedly ferocious in battle but gentle and caring with their peoples' and policies. Must I always point out the obvious contradiction? Such spineless leadership should realistically translate to poor combat abilities, yet these perfect paragons never fail to supersede reality and excel in all of the commonly-perceived virtues of individual character. Surely such noble persons would never fabricate any details of their impressive biographies, such is only done by despicable despots like myself! I find the Kmer to be an excruciatingly accurate representation of the sort of flawless leader which I have just described. Despite the forced attempt, I am not impressed by her professed military career. I indeed have trouble believing her to be capable of singlehandedly rallying a nearly-defeated army to stunning victory. Such reeks of the mythic fables which bards entertain illiterate proles with, or even the blatant propaganda in which warlords flatter themselves with. It seems that she attempts to surmount this generic format of an exemplary ruler by claiming to still be haunted by her experiences during the wars in which she fought, probably to present some sort of weakness of hers to disprove any doubts about her background. Though I before have seen similar attempts to break the self-manufactured mold, yet it too fails to convince me of her genuineness. Besides, why would such an indomitable warrior be tormented of the memories of a war in which she performed so exceptionally? Her "biography," to me, simply doesn't hold water. But maybe Kamile is whom she claims to be, a brave fighter but also a compassionate leader, ignoring the blatant contradictions. If she is such a ruler, than I still have nothing but contempt for her. She fights for the rights of the oppressed and down-trodden, how superficially noble! But who doesn't claim to do such deeds? I've spat out the same pandering nonsense, every leader has, it means nothing. Besides her supposed wartime feats, she has no noteworthy accomplishments. She is just another "perfect" ruler, who has effortlessly arisen to power and harmoniously rules over a vast domain without any trouble. I have extreme difficulty in finding any sort of realism in the given account of her, though I must say that I appear to have exhausted myself while droning on about this unimpressive dolt, and so I shall cease my statements and find a more meaningful way to spend my time."

"Oh, so you're the leader of the 'twelve-pilot revolution' Miya told me about? I can't help but think she was being a little too poetic; twelve people really aren't enough to form the mass, popular groundswell that really defines a 'revolution!' But hey, now's not the time to quibble definitions with Miya. Now's the time to talk about you! So... what do I think of you?

"I figure you're doing the right thing by deserting. I mean, I think the Arctic Ocean Union seemed pretty sketchy from the outset—calling people "equipment" is already crossing all sorts of lines, plus if we bring some theory in their nostalgia for the prewar hegemony seems like a parallel to counterrevolution to me—but the secret behind ATAC and Alis was definitely beyond the pale.

"Part of me wonders what your Class 1 crime was. But you know, in a regime like AOU, where they talk up their freedom and judge the rest of the world publicly, while under the table they rip kids away from their parents—in a regime like that, I'm not even sure "Class 1 Criminal" would even mean anything. Anyway, what's past is past, and what's present is present, and what you're doing is trying to get a better future for Alis. And I figure, that's what's more important!"

CARRIE

"Oh, hello, Alis! According to my programming, curiosity about you would be an appropriate and human-like behavior, as there are enough superficial parallels between us to justify interest in exploring common ground. However, upon further investigation, I am discovering that you and I have very little in common after all! While we both may be part machine, you are part human and I am just part more machine. The Nouden Corporation has asked me to remind everyone that while Alis, is in fact a young, human child who has simply been cybernetically jury-rigged into acting as a supercomputer AI, CARRIE units such as myself are not human and should not be compared to Alis, who in fact is experiencing a human rights atrocity. Alis, from one not-actually-sentient-being to one not-actually-computer-being, good luck, and may justice yet come either to you or against those who did wrong do to you.

"In the meantime, in the rare event that Baizou and AOU's timelines ever overlap, might I recommend using CARRIEs as an alternative to Alis-esque kidnappings? You can have all of the human-like interaction with none of the human rights atrocities! Of course, the Preventing Cassette Intelligence Misuse Act of 2000 prohibits employing CARRIEs in violent labor, but it is possible that in an overlapped timeline, WW3 may devastate Baizou such that the nation-state—and legal obligations to its laws—effectively cease to exist. Naturally, the Nouden Corporation hopes that never happens! But it doesn't hurt to have contingency plans!"

"Ghidorah and I have known each other for a bit now. While I am still not fond of the aggressive desire to press others into worshipping her (being completely the opposite of how I feel) I cannot fault her for her devotion to caring for those who do. Whether people choose to worship her out of fear or genuine love and respect, they can do so in complete satisfaction of knowing that they would be very well looked after. That being said, if I were a mortal in her world, I would rather have that reassurance and accept her rather than suffer outside of it, since prosperity would come much easier. As for her enemies, they are very few, considering the fact that she has already obliterated those who have openly opposed her. On a personal level, we have both reached a great level of respect with one another. I would go as far as to call her a friend, and in time, it is only going to get better. My views are

The Tsardom of Alaska

Царство Аляски, or the Russian Empire lives on in it's old colony, Alaska after the conclusion of the Russian Revolution of 1917. Standing with it's allies against the Moscow Accord of Russia and it's alliance members, nevertheless world tensions dwindle and the people of Alaska grow ever more desensitised with the conservative status quo, and their insistence on clinging to a now redundant past.

"First, my congratulations to Leyboristskaya and to President Mikhailovna for their recent electoral victory! I believe the page is turning to a new chapter for Alyaski.

"Ah, I see you've been in politics as a career? Though your path took you through the party first, and only later to office. And I admire your thorough education, going beyond your undergraduate education to pursue a Master's degree! Next, it's interesting to me that your party would describe you as a quiet child, yet an impassioned speaker. I suppose you save the ardor for when you think it's needed, maybe?

"Ah, you remind me of myself six years ago, when I became Premier. I, like you, was still relatively new to political office—though you do have an advantage over me as a party insider—and to find myself in a position of responsibility like that, well! What can I say? It was a lot! I like to think I've done my best with my years in office. And I wish good luck to you, that you may do the same for Alyaski."

I must say, Comrade Meikawa is quite the interesting figure. Her experience and political ideology remind me of many colleagues in our nation, especially those in the Communist Party.

I will begin by noting where I approve of Meikawa's vigor, her tenacity, and her solid grasp of class struggle. Though many of Baizou's lawmakers and

"I strangely feel like I know next to nothing about Demian Blackwell, though I do have a substantial grasp of what ze Lightning War was like. I am guessing Blackwell's role in zis classified endeavor is not to be revealed at zis time, or ever; as such, I cannot pass proper judgment upon him. I am quick to criticise others, I admit, and 'tis something I must work on. But my personal flaws are not relevant here. For to understand Blackwell, or at least how Blackwell operates, I want to know what type of entity he is.

What I mean by zat is what shapes his personality. Is he cold, calculating, and aloof, or is he cantankerous and tyrannical? How personable is he? Is he closed-off? Haunted? I do not know. And I understand he is making great scientific contributions to his Kingdom, and that he utilises every schlub of taxpayer money. But what specifically are these projects?

As it is, I do not feel like I can adequately judge Blackwell's character. As such, my opinion is rather neutral, leaning toward distrust."

"Of course it is left to organics to allow such a miserable leech sit on their throne and then let him continue his drinking habit virtually unimpeded. Alastair is an objective failure of a leader and I will stand by that statement until I can find any proof as to disprove it (which I know I will not). He is a miserable creature who wastes the time and effort of his already inefficient and incompetent parliament while gathering pity from the population at large! Only organics could be so stupid as to feel any remorse for someone as pathetic as he is.

I don't even think assimilation could help someone who is so deep in his own addiction since he'd probably find a way to get drunk off the Aether and squander whatever chance he had to do something worthwhile with his pitiful existence. My opinion of Alastair is strictly negative and I truly hope that some organic in that farce of a nation has enough intelligence to remove him from the throne."

"The grand mechanator, a failure as a human, or more known as an organic in his terms. But thanks to the Paramount, you can now exel, only costing your humanity. Or perhaps your skin, you seem to still have some humanity in you, just lacking empathy.

You were so willing to rebel against your own. That's a good trait in our nation. But I wonder if the paramount trusts you, if you still hold that hold that trait. You know as a king don't mind you, but personally I don't know. I must ask, if the paramount fell, would you revert to your former self, or is there another idea in mind?"-Luden
