"Did Foresittend and his pals eat lots of "Eat Me" cakes with tea? I mean, look how large they are! All Valentine Z is such a wonderland for Alices to explore, and ol' Jager just fits the place! I know, that he made some armor, which resists acids, bullets, missiles, whatever the hell ya' want within a large range. Hell, even radiation... And it's awesome, cause I don't see a lil' star and small print message, that it works only against alpha and beta radiation. So it's safe to assume, they mean, it protects agaisnt even nasty and all-piercin' gamma rays. Wonder, how did it feel for him to live in Singapore? "Today, I, General Onox, will talk about San Horo now, so you'll better listen, or else! Horo is a funny man, always prattling about his weird ideology he thinks is the solution for all of the worlds problems. While I, General Onox, find your goal to improve things rather silly, your means to achieve them are rather wonderfully destructive indeed. And what are you currently doing? Starting a civil war because you noticed that, in that weird system you have there where people get elected, not enough people shared your ideals. I, General Onox, love this. It will end with enormous amounts of destruction in either way, the local areas will be leveled and in the end, either your or them are gonna be purged with gusto. It is just so wonderful, seeing so much future consequences from your acts alone. I, General Onox, wish you good luck and look forward to the destruction that will happen soon."

He is an exotic creature and the Empire's best does not believe our methods in personality control will fix to be more professional and polite towards foreign officials. Nonetheless, you Mr President if that is how one refers to a title granted upon one appointed by the peasantry, and not a circle of qualified selectors. You gain my respect for your service towards your Fatherland, a soldier is a tool that ensures a people and their cultures survives, when pacification by the table has failed. But luckily for the President he, when he served, wasn't needed with the prevailing of diplomacy. However, I'm curious about his winning the hearts and minds of the people. I don't see a significant event that could spark such a fever to get him into office. Perhaps it was just his backstory as a warrior? I'll assume that is the case, the masses do love the men and women that are willing to risk their lives for their countrymen.

In regards to his policies, they are agreeable to an extent, the people should have breathing room for peacetime as an iron fist isn't necessary as there is no ongoing emergency that deserves drastic measures. Yet, that doesn't mean being so lax that the masses have the freedom to own military equipment or consume toxic substances that will cause an emergency with internal enemies being easily able to conspiracy against the state, and play the state as a bringer of plague by allowing people to willfully poison their minds and bodies. In addition, transparency could backfire despite the noble intentions to hold bureaucrats accountable but there are more efficient ways in keeping crooked in check without opening the doors of the state to the world. Overall, I'm fairly positive with the nation that I'm not fully aware of his country's situation and why he enacted the policies that seem to be counterproductive than productive.

I like to think of The African Emirates as the ultimate form of democracy. We are many minds, and I am simply their spokesperson. This form of governance has allowed us a meteoric rise to our current position, while this tyrannical government is stuck on a ball of dirt.

The doctrine of anarchy espoused by Bjornson is one driven by decadence, naivety, and outright malice. He is a brutish thug with no rallying cry beyond "death to that which governs!" -- he does not discern between governments and their nature, merely screeching like a child at "oppressive" states, be they revolutionary or reactionary, for he finds the proper utilisation of social authority to be a distasteful thing. He has a blunt desire to overthrow that which he desires corrupt, or radical, and so he engages in an imperial subjugation of foreign peoples, condemning them to the atomising "liberties" he has offered beneath his chaotic dominion. He is uneducated and a poor administrator. There is literally no use to him, and he brings nothing but terror and violence to those he seeks to "emancipate".

The optimal outcome for the world at large regarding Shawn is rather simple: a bullet.

This man is yet another twisted image, this time of Mawar Al-Sherbak. Where Sherbak feared for his life every waking moment since he took office, Turaniski is highly suspicious of his peers and probably would go to great lengths to incriminate them if he could without facing harsh discipline or instability within the party. Shame, really. But at least the problem of Mawar solved itself with an ironic twist, hence I now stand where he was. That aside, his policy does seem rather curious. Socialist ideals, but not quite communist. Militarized to a point. Mildly hawkish views on the world, but with a greater focus on his own country than those beyond his borders, in spite of that mild longing for conquest. If only he were more nationalist, only then could his country prosper and allow him to reach deeper into the hearts and minds of the people. But perhaps that could be a plan for the future, or for the next one in line to take hold of office once he falls.
