Not a crime, but probably not a good idea.

Stealing a tank and using it to demolish the house of someone you don't like very much.

Life in prison with a maybe chance of parole. Like that's seriously insane. Not only does it cause a lot of danger to anybody within a vicinity of the house, you stole a freaking weapon of war, but it could've also triggered gas explosions that could have killed dozens, depending on how populated the area is. And all of that is assuming that you were just running the tank into the house. If you were opening fire, you'd most likely receive life without parole or the death penalty.

Stealing a bike officer's bike and then riding around in circles as he tries to stop you, then eventually riding off and never giving it back.

Jailed for up to five years and fined 2x the total property damage. The fine is split so the entire property damage bill is paid to the victim/business or their insurer, 50% of the remainder is paid to the victim as compensation, and the other 50% is used as a financial penalty and to recover court costs etc.

Running with scissors on a busy street?

Are the scissors in your hand? Are the blades open? Are the blades out? Is it in a bag? Do you intend to use it for a nefarious purpose?

For the sake of giving you the answer to the question you were probably intending to ask, if you were to run down a busy street with scissors in your hand, the blade open and able to stab somebody, you might get a (potentially violent) stop from the police for disturbing the peace, which carries a fine, although would be made heftier, due to the circumstances. It could also carry some jail time if you were to have cut or stabbed anyone whilst running with the opened scissors (perhaps a few weeks to two months or so for cuts that drew blood but didn't go deep enough to cause harm, several months to a couple years if you stabbed someone or cut an artery or something, and obviously, if someone died because of you, you'd most likely get life imprisonment for mischief resulting in depth).

So now that I have overanalyzed your joke question to the point of it no longer being funny, AN, what is your punishment for...

Err... not illegal as in something the police would crack down on due to a mere report, but the church would absolutely have the right to press charges, given it is not public property and disturbing the peace of some sort. If the police were called, they might just disperse those participating, but likely not take anyone into custody.

Glue yourself and some of your friends to an important street as a form of protest, thereby blocking traffic and interrupting hundreds, if not thousands of commutes.

If it's in a rural area, I doubt anyone would care, but you might get a fine for leaving the corpses in the middle of the road for someone else, that presumably resides in the area, to pick up. In an urban area, you'd probably be taken in for disturbing the peace, since there'd be blood and guts and crushed dog in the full view of plenty.
