The Empire of Occitania wrote:

That capitalism has been outlawed, and the Ministry of Truth has an artistic branch dedicated to fashion design. Unsurprisingly, their creations do seem rather dull.

While Occitania was historically only a region in modern France, the Occitanian Empire controls the territory of Kingdom of Aragon, Piedmont, in addition to most of French France.

"Nuclear Fallout and residue from the Third Pacific War is its biggest economic lashback, with the Agrarian industry in decline since the late 20th Century. Pockets of radiation continue to plague desolate areas deemed unsuitable for living by local authorities. Environmental policies, although largely paid attention to, remain scarce to resolve exponentially long-term difficulties such as nation-wide pollution and harmful gas emission. Nevertheless, Asia's Tourism industry fails to decline- known for the nation's rich history, diverse climates, strict egalitarianism, and futuristic cities; all of which contrast with the lush countrysides that grow in harmony with Metropolitan areas."

There was a Third Pacific War that I have no idea about what caused it, and theres long-term difficulties like pollution and gas emission, and the Tourism Industry has yet to decline.

It seems that Godular at least interfaces with the Star Wars universe, as they are in contact with the Chiss. Although Godulans don't breed so much as asexually reproduce, they have managed to achieve some kind of genetic mixing with the Chiss thanks to their retention of a supply of genetic information. I'm not quite sure if or why this was an objective to be achieved, but it nonetheless was.

I will rest, knowing that once my nephew has passed the torch, it will be my son's line to take the helm, and my son, Wilhelm, has my absolute trust that he will not let the Vaterland fall from grace."

- Wilhelm, Prince of Prussia, to his wife Hermine on his deathbed. Wilhelm's son would ascend as Kaiser Wilhelm II on 1945, but would pass away from disease only two years later.

As the name implicates, there are so many interesting quotes out there, but I think this one takes the cake, because I learned something about the poor people (not literally poor, I mean it in "Oh shit, poor guy). Wilhelm's quote is pretty sad and gut-wrenching in itself, but it was what's next to come (and came) that was even sadder. His son would manage and at least try to, but alas, the disease got him in 2 years. Very tragic, I feel.

@ Khoronzon:

Khoronzon's Setting and Timeline wrote:

Khoronzon is set in the year 2325, and covers a vast territory stretching from Lithuania to Japan, going through most of Russia as well as parts of Finland, Mongolia, and Northern China. Originating as an obscure cult in early 22nd century Russia, it took advantage of a global societal crisis, caused by a combination of environmental panic, economic recession, widespread poverty and resource shortage, and violent political dissatisfaction, to consolidate its power within the disintegrating social order, gradually taking control over whatever semblance of "nation" was left as the government lost its grip.

The interesting bit to me, and what I have learned, is the highlighted bit about originating from a cult. I once thought that it came about because of some violent uprising and some guy being elected as a temporary power until he himself became a dictator of some sorts. Also, it would appear that if the cult can do that sort of revolution... they definitely have the charms and wits to manipulate people into their doing, and that's interesting and yet terrifying. But nothing is as terrifying as my guess on their successful revolution/rebellion: They printed enough pamphlets. I bet they have millions of dollars for color printing.

They've got a shit-ton of puppet nations. The memorable ones are obviously this one, Alanis Star, Samantha Higgs, and 6th Mile Road. Of course there are the single character nations. But a lot of them are for collecting cards. Hmm, I wonder how you can manage all of them without one of them going dead from inactivity.
