"Alright, who's next? Admiral Najarala, is it? That is a very important position. Military strength is of utmost importance to a nation. As I continue reading your file, a few things stick out to me. First, there's the matter of your health. Or more specifically, your society's reaction to it. As an admiral, what matters is your brain, not your body. As long as your genius is still able to function, there shouldn't be an issue. But the reaction from your people, now that is a fucking problem. You should have everyone who speaks up against you in that manner executed for high treason. It's what I'd do in your position. You seem to have done something about this, so I can at least say that in your favor.

And there's another thing that sticks out to me, and it sours my opinion more so. There's something in here about you worshipping something. I know you're too stupid to understand this, but gods don't exist. They're just some idiot idea that idiot lesser beings came up with because they're scared of the idea that their lives are meaningless and that existence is governed by nothing more than the random splitting of atoms. Ugh, it really fucking pisses me off when people go around calling any being with more power and capabilities than them a 'god'. Even with all your science you still can't escape from your stupid, petty folklore. At least your military will make for a fun little challenge for my genius when it comes time to add your tiny, little federation to my collection. I might even let you live, Admiral Najarala. No reason. It just amuses me."

Irrespective of whether I like it or not, it has been an objective fact since the beginning of life that higher beings will, and they will, have full authority over those of a significantly lower strata, and facts don't care about my feelings. Doesn't mean that she's fine. The very existence of this SRAR person adds exactly nothing of value to the omniverse; in fact, she reduces it. have met, so I am Clarissa, and I am indeed an android! Fully operational, with my own thoughts and feelings, coupled with my usual machine parts! It's such a pleasure to meet you! Hm hm, you are definitely quite a charmer! I have read about your dossier, and specifically the publications of yours that I have gotten ahold of, and I must say, they are amazing! Neurogenerative Artificial Intelligence! I have tried the codes and languages of the old. K-means clustering, Kernel methods, Support Vector Machines, Receiver Operating Characteristics! I know them all, and they have been the baseline of my test as a fully-functional AI! I suppose it is sufficient to say that Isalov Industries really did amazing things with me! Anyway, enough about me, so sorry! I really do like your work and your interest in mathematics, physics, and just about everything in-between. I think you and Marcus can have such an amazing talk with one another, though for now, it's me here, so you are free to talk to me about these concepts, too! Unfortunately, I have read about "peaceful genocide" to eradicate the "useless class", and I must say, that is unfortunately where my passion and interest in you stopped. That is rather ridiculously ineffective and inhumane! A peaceful genocide is an oxymoron, and you will find that your world will live much better if you actually try your hand in preserving the Earth instead of killing off the people. I have ran 6.43 trillion simulations on this, a good 99.593% of them confirming this! In short, you are someone I am fascinated by for knowledge, but your morality is poor!

"This Exuberant Superintendant Clarissa makes me very curious... It's one thing, that she is a well built, superb and highly advanced sapient AI with extreme calculation capabilities. Having as many bits is awesome enough, but she has those awesomized quantum bits, qubits, which are just like bits, but with superposition, number gets even higher. I am pretty sure she can store far more data than all our horde can with all it's assets. And there gonna be more... But more interesting is the other. How exactly do sapient AIs develop their own ethics and morals? And where is the point, when AI could be considered sapient?

Her own personality development was directed by the researchers from the start, somewhat like that of a small child, mentored by caring family, while our own sapient robot, John Walker AI wasn't even intended to become sapient at first place. He was a rather simple self-learning program, which was let as much memory as it required. On his own, he became more and more complex, as he was fed new data, and one day, he developed sapience. I ain't a computer scientist, so I can only speculate... And quantum stuff is just beyond me.

And another question... how the hell, when dealing with sapient AI's problems one can know for sure, who is actually needed, a psychologist, or computer scientists? Or perhaps in societies, where sapient AIs form a sizeable demographic, there are specialists, who combine computer knowledge with psychology? Because it might be extremely hard sometimes to find out if behavioural abnormality in AI is caused by mental health crisis, or a software bug. For example, an obsessive idea could be caused by both mental health crisis or just a loop in programming.

"I must express my empathy for the Heavenly Queen's situation. Growing up with distant and absent parents and the threat of violence alone is a cause for sorrow, but to be expected to represent a fractured nation and take on a position as its highest authority in just a few years time on top of that is something I never would have been able to bear at her age. I respect her determination to remedy her country's ills and return it to prosperity, spiritual and otherwise. Regrettably my small island home is in no position to offer any meaningful assistance in this regard, but I hope I can look forward to positive relations with this particular China as the Queen matures. Of course, that will depend on whether she is willing to look past my inhuman nature, I have no doubt that she has been taught that yōkai are untrustworthy spirits at best, if she has indeed been taught about us at all."

"Yeah dude, thanks, but maybe ya' could tell something more about this opinion stuff, partner? I mean, journalists, askin' for opinion here are waiting and lusting for exclusive material! And short remarks give them too little of it. Think of journalists man!"-Shawn

OOC: Oh boy, make it more... detailed! Longer! Put some effort! Entertain the public! Cause last batch of their tomatos is spoiled, and those rotten tomatos might fly.

Such a shame, really. With that said, hello to you, Mr. Shawn. Long time, no see, I suppose! I have observed your universe that you live in, it is going to last some time, so I would worry too much on an end-of-the-scenario. I still am positive on you, of course, and though you mean well, Holly has made a bit of a point from herself that she would not really like people studying her. It makes her a bit uncomfortable with such a notion. I don't often see someone was brawled up and strong as you being lightning fast. Don't get me wrong, that IS a good thing, but it is a rare fascination. Usually we have fragile glass cannons, or mighty glaciers, but it's hard to find a lightning bruiser. For that, I am quite positive, of course, among many other things! I wish you luck, and hey, let me know if you need an intervention. I can make something work. ^^
