Igorrr & Indian Sonic-Grodji

I've been mixed on singing from Indian's (The actual Indian's, not Native Americans). While I think a lot of them have this unique style of singing compared to a lot of singing, for some reason the male and females singing both have commonly got on my nerves for whatever reason. But I really quite like her singing in this.

As much as I try not to lately right now while I'm trying to catch up with music I'm backed up on as is, I find new music...My dad showed me this band, and now I might need to check out Indian Sonic.

Behind The Haystack - This version is performed by Brendan Larrisey, Andrew MacNamara and Gary O'Briain, at least according to the video's title. I shamefully have no idea who originally composed this Celtic piece, nor have I actually heard of these men.

This version is played by Karen Ashbrook, but this link is to a PC game track that contains both Behind The Haystack and Good Morning To Your Nightcap. Both are, in my opinion, very joyous songs, and playing them both in this order doesn't shift the mood I feel when I listen to either of them.

Oh, and the game I'm preferring to is called "Fate."

Captain O'Kane - Another Celtic song, this version performed by Aryeh Frankfurter. The original composer, however, is Turlough O'Carolan.

I'm beginning to wonder if Mr. O'Carolan is the same person who composed the song mentioned prior to this post...

The Clergy's Lamentation - Another one of O'Carolan's works. This one is performed by Kathleen Gahagan.

Not anything currently, but wishing to listen to either Johnny Cash's version of "Rusty Cage", or Clutch's song "Regulator". I'm starting to appreciate this country-rock sort of stuff I've been finding.
