Okay, I'm just starting to realize something about almost everybody's nations:
most of the time they are set in North America (whether they own parts of the continent or they own the whole thing) or in Europe, be they Britain, Germany, France; others are set in Asia and they just happen to be Japan or China or they set up their own version of Eastasia.

My question on the latter: where are all the fractured Chinese warlord states warring for control of China at?

Most of said nations are utopia/dystopia wanks tbf. And making a nation outside of "everything is awesome and cool" or "every sucks" requires research. And fractured warlordism only works as a dystopia in western countries (according to NSers), because literally no other country besides America/Britain has regionalism due to cultural, political, and/or ethnic differences apparently.

Eastern Korea? More like Worstem Korea! My entire concept of comedy is derived solely from Instagram and reddit memes and I have no concrete sense of humor of my own to draw upon! Also Darren keeps shoving me into the lockers at school and my father beat me with a belt for blasting Crazy Frog at 11 o'clock at night, so this is my only real outlet to release my horrific pent-up urges by roleplaying as a militaristic slaving superpower that makes dumb memey jokes and one liners on AN threads!
