Based on the part at the start I don't particularly think it is supposed to be taken literally, and I have to wonder what his actual opinions on everything he is singing about in that song is. Because I have no problem with people singing about dark stuff that might have nothing to do with what they actually believe, even if I might not like it.

Oh, he doesn't actually believe it. In fact, he even apologized in one of his rap songs for being misogynistic toward his ex during a freestyle, because "All women are souls". But that doesn't change the fact that his rap is utterly devoid of merit these days. I mean, I can see rapping about killing and greed and things like that, in a particular context of reality. But he's just talking about shitty things for the shock value, there's no philosophy, or point, or conveying the feelings and viewpoint of a real criminal--there's the point that music isn't meant to be taken seriously, and if you don't like free speech then fuck off, but he already did that perfectly with his defining song. Now he's just saying the same shit, but with a weak ass flow: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Bv1vLumtSWs>

I haven't really got into much rap stuff yet, but yeah, that definitely is more about the lyrics.

Which the industry is losing track of.

“

I think it is described as a post-rock song mixed with classical and electronic.

World's End Girlfriend-Listening You

I'm hesitant to classify anything as classical if doesn't possess a particular form. Free form classical is the trickiest and most ambiguous, but the complex variation of themes usually nails it. This song is good, but I'm a bit on the fence about applying the term "classical".

Yeah, that doesn't particularly surprise me at all. Even from me not paying much attention to him even when he was considered good, I can see he has gotten worse.

Which the industry is losing track of.

Actually, I've heard the hip-hop realm has gotten better as of late. Maybe not in the mainstream but there has been a really good underground hip-hop scene I've heard details about.

Have you heard of Death Grips? I don't know if you'd like them but they've been getting a ton of praise and it is one of the few hip-hop artists (Or more like band) that I've been able to tolerate. But I haven't tried to look into that type of music yet. And even that I can't listen to often.

Anthony Fantano also listens to quite a lot of underground hip-hop artists so you might check some of his reviews out. Or I could find some of his stuff and throw it your way, whichever.

Yeah, I see your point. Even if it is "classical" it is used very loosely as a term in the song and it is barely an aspect of the song as well.

World's End Girlfriend-Cruel Girl's Beauty

This guy makes some very unique and very strange music.

I saw something that said he has written something like 600 songs. And from the looks of it with some actual effort. Merzbow, which has a freaking ton of albums, sounds like he just recycles his material forever and that's how he releases so many albums.

World's End Girlfriend-Heartbreak Wonderland

There are instances of classical crossing with other genres, although the only certain examples that come to my mind are all classical/jazz.

As a rapper I would have a really hard time remembering all the lyrics, since a lot of times they pack so many lyrics into their songs.

These seem to be some long albums. More in the sense there are a lot of long. Like one of the albums has 10 songs and 5 are over 10 minutes long.
