welcome to the RACaverse where heads of state are probably insane and ground troops are just RTS units

You think that's bad, I have a bad case with The Sixty where a lot of them needs a rework because the abilities are either total ripoffs without changing anything, or worse...

I gave them the same damn Assault Rifle.

Primary: Automatic assault rifle. Long range, damage fall off of 20 damage per shot at 100 meter range. Small spread angle.

I am sure there are 3-4 of them with the same AR...

Again, "cliche" is too strong a word, and it'd be better to say "trope" in this case, but I am rather impressed by how many nations actually progress through time, even through real time. Like, whoa! Instead of doing as I do and vainly trying to manufacture permanence by freezing my fiction in place, folks actually embracing the relentless passage of time? That's guts.

I try to finish my shit before I move time, or at least have enough progress in it to start moving time, but if not? I'm sticking to the time period, 2023, I have some plans specifically for the year 2027, then when that ends, I'll finally end the madness by 2028, which hopefully brings RACaverse's chaos to a standstill...at least on the surface. There's still a lot of things to cover.

Oh, and a spoiler but the US annexes Iraq later on, that's all I can share.

Giving everyone the same rifle is the standard thing most militaries do. It's for ubiquity and parts interchangeability to ease logistics. They can throw magazines around and they can all use it. All the ammo crates doesn't need to be sorted for fear of loading the wrong chamber in the heat of the moment and overall simplifies the process.

That said it's important to give specialised roles and proper tools for those specialized tasks to fill up the deficiencies in having only one weapons platform.

That said I just give everyone a DMR and just train them to have nerves of steel when under fire. A machine gunners role is irrelevant when the enemy force gets picked off one by one and the enemy force is not able to lay suppressive fire. Suppressive fire is not a thing in my militaries small unit tactics, the objective is not to be under fire in first place and that means hitting your enemy and establishing dominance over the area of operations by pure fear immobilize the enemy and able to move around them. This helps in peacekeeping operations and police operations because the dmr's are very discriminatory in fire and can pick off insurgents goading civilians into a protest line at gunpoint. Vehicles are another story, they can use as high a rate of fire as possible and use as much explosive munitions as possible. We use small vehicles frequently in urban combat. The scene looks frequently like a Bull in a China shop. Outside of combat and in peacekeeping operations in urban areas footsoldiers take a role, often using secondary weapons such as repeating crossbows and throwing knives as not to blow the ears out of the local population. That said, most if not all conflicts fought by this nation was on our own turf.

Small unit tactics still uses grenades and explosive ammo, booby traps, rockets and 5.7 sub machine guns as secondary weapons to lock down a building (only issued in special circumstances when dealing with urban warfare without adequate vehicles UGVs etc, ie as last resort when we expended all options, leveling a city (after evacuation of course) and still getting resistance). All our rifles have standard 1-1.5 MOA accuracy.

Edit: since we know that a attacking force will always lose approximately 60 percent more of the force than the defending force (1.6:1 attacking:defending ratio) we revolve around the doctrine that favors DMR's and defending and breaking contact if need be. To hold another line. Vehicles do small scale advancing, leveling buildings, clearing rooms, etc.

A footsoldier is more likely to just throw grenades and use rockets in a room and leave it for a vehicle to clear it.

Channeling my inner LeMay here (and ignoring Fallout's weird tech and timeline) but any nuclear war before the 1970s or mid-60s could still be debatably winnable for the USA. Sure, most everyone in Eastern Europe and China will be dead, along with a good chunk of Western Europe...and the fallout and nuclear autumn could place a dent on unindustrialized countries' crop supplies, it could even poison the crops of some industrialized countries, like the UK and Japan...killing many millions more in the Old World and especially in the Southern Hemisphere and in parts of Latin America for a few years...but I'm certain that industrialized civilization will prevail.

~~Also, Mr. President, I'm not saying we wouldn't get our hair mussed. But I do say no more than ten to twenty million killed, tops.~~ tbf this isn't rare if a state of total war exists. that being said you do see strategic bombings and firebombings pulled out way too often when that state doesn't exist imo.

Though it does raise eyebrows if MT or PMT nations with access to top-quality guided munitions do it. Not that hundreds of thousands of people won't potentially die when many basic services held up by the infrastructure you just surgically removed inevitably fail...

Well, just like a Tom Clancy novel, the book will end and everything will get sorted out off-screen, I guess. Unless there's a sequel hook where the bombed want their revenge.

yes, that's true. even total war in the modern day would probably be incredibly more targeted.

Which leads me to another cliché. Russian nations are a dime a dozen, but always with the USSR-based nations or restored tsardoms or someone nations based off the Russian Federation. What about the Kievan Rus? Or the Russian Provisional Government? Or the Duchy of Moscow? Etc.

okay, but actually even in writing i don't think i've seen a legitimately trans leader on this site with the exceptions of baizou's ambassador miya and bcs' president washington. i don't mean this as a gatekeeping thing, mind, it's just that... the settings that i can think of that openly consider the matter are either ft or fant settings where the condition is rightly rendered irrelevant by the ability to just swap bodies (know a few people who could use that) or settings where it feels like the author's thoughts were "bro, turning dudes into chicks sounds hot." roania getting an rp locked for borderline fetish material comes to mind. like... it just doesn't seem to be considered very often, and while that makes sense it's still a little odd since you'd think that with like at least 60% of the female leaders on here and a significant minority of male ones being some flavor of gay or bi there would be more trans characters. i guess maybe people don't feel comfortable writing it, i don't know.

sorry for the rant, just been thinking about this specific matter in literary terms a bit lately.

fuckin fair point there, can't argue with that.

Believe it or not I was just thinking about doing something like that for Polyphonia, but not having gone through the experience of transitioning I wouldn't feel completely comfortable writing someone who has.
