"You are a machine, yes? Where I hail from, it is not considered a normally activity to even mind the thoughts of inanimate objects, but considering that you are actually capable of thought, it would be unfair to dismiss you and take you for granted, like I would a toaster. Then again, the ancients did consider everything was animated with spirit.

I suppose one could introspect over whether sentience grants you a soul, or transcendent human motivators, behind your actions. Curiosity is something you definitely possess, if the prohibitions in your 'additional directives' are anything to go by, almost as innocent as a child crushing and anthill, though no toddler is capable of destroying entire moons. I cannot blame you entirely for perceived recklessness, that is an issue I have with your creators, which fortunately enough, have limited the scope of your activities. I am a tad disappointed though, prior to this encounter I would have expected a robotic intelligence to be a bit more, how should I say it? Proper."

one who prioritizes the people cannot be considered remotely good if they sit on a throne. We've heard of the human named Marx, and how he has majorly impacted a great portion of the human quest to socialism, but we must attest, we doubt he would support a nation so oxymoronic as to be Social and Monarchistic any more than we would.

A noble at birth, living without hardship, without a life in the mud, speaking of the hardships of workers and theories above them while sipping on sweet fineries from expensive cafes. It is disgusting that such a creature would even claim to represent the workers, much less climb their way up to seat themselves on a throne for them. The very nature of a social state requires the willing acceptance and vote of the people. One mind sitting on a seat of gold, is barbaric, evil, and disheartening, no matter how positive that mind may be.

The precedents that lone rule leave are negative for states that have a singular unchecked head. Your less educated people may hop for joy as their 'benevolent' monarch parades around them with gifts of civil liberties and peaceful rule, but their children, who will inevitably face your descendants and students, they will not laugh. Giving power to one inevitably leads to corruption, leads to greed, leads to evil. You dig your own peoples' graves by calling yourself socialist. You put a barrel to their head while keeping them blindfolded, in the fashion of telling them all is okay. You are a hypocrite in more ways that we could count, and as such, we end our statement rephrasing our distaste for the very concept of your rule."

"Ah, A big ass robot that expects everyone to get along fine. This bitch really think there totally isn't gonna be someone that ruins everyone's experience without enforcing peace by force. Not sorry to burst your bubble but that isn't how society works. You either enforce it or abandon the plan entirely, No inbetween" - Simon Holten, Chancellor of Novostia

You are going to write more, or just focus on that one part about her happiness alone (because you have such a hatred for me in the cliches thread, you called me dumb)?

No lie, I don't mind my characters being negatively panned, but come on, add about something else as well. There literally is a lot more to her. Talk crap about her camera eyes, or something.

"Hey, I like this one!"

"...do I even want to ask why? This man's a crude, unlikable, insulting piece of shit with a penchant for being a self-serving bastard on top of it all. I bet he'd be at home on a barstool sipping bourbon being vaguely threatening to drunks with a gyrogun in his lap."

"Probably not, to be honest. But I'm going to say why anyways."

...Not even going to touch on that second part, Lilja.

So, uh... firstly, well, I mean, he's a soldier. He actually knows how to fight, and more importantly, he knows who he fights. Admittedly he's a bit offensive, but he hasn't said anything you don't hear while you're cycling into an inspection op. Dude's a soldier, for a certain definition of 'soldier'. He hasn't fucked up too badly. Yet. Knows how to rally support, too. That counts for something. And two, it's because he's dodged just about as many paternity suits as I ha-"

"79/21% approval ratings? Bullshit. Dude's an interventionist. Neolib, to be more precise. Literally the textbook definition of 'smarmy bastard tricking the rest of us into thinking the bastards up in their ivory towers are our friends'. But then again, for every more or less agreeable person here there's ten of him. Glad he's dead, thins out the ranks a bit."

Ah... sorry. I's trying to not get so pissy about this stuff, it's just... old memories. Very old memories."

"Uh... if you'll permit me t' get all philosophical and such for a bit..."

"Can it, Miss Deputy-Port-Manager. You're on shift right now. Anyways, uh... there's something to be said for this here Clarissa woman- robot?- woman being able t' shrug off a nuke and put down 'bout as much firepower as a navy cutter and yet bein' so peaceable and such all the same. It's not quite an iron fist in a scarlet glove, since that implies, well, malice- there's no malice here, I don't think. She's genuinely a good human being. Sorry, I know you ain't, it's just... I don't think humanity's innate. Humanity's learned, and maybe the Man don't have it, but Clarissa sure as hell does. A kind and soulful machine, heh, and yet she's able to decimate this whole station in about five seconds- really food for thought, isn't it? Force and kindness really can go together, and power don't always corrupt. I've got a bit of a hard time believing it, but... there it is. Thank god for the little things, I guess.

Or... big things. Very, very big things. Big things with a lot of guns."

bn, do Rubin. his name links to his profile. his profile isn't designed for length so formulating an opinion might be a bit harder, sorry about that. if it's too sparse for you, though, just say so and do good ol' Bert instead.
