Oh, they're everywhere apparently.

Galician, Eonavian, and Basque are co-official languages, but knowledge of Castilian is mandatory throughout the country.

Despite their archipelago being surrounded by a permanent and deadly storm ring that essentially forms an impenetrable barrier against foreign invasion, they seem to enjoy large-scale immigration and significant international trade. I guess there's a way to get around / through / under / over it somehow?

Icaros is the only independent polity in the System it presides in, and while primarily situated in Aquui (the place of its foundation), it has protectorates and other semi-autonomous territories on the other planets in the Aquui system.

Out of a total of 115 seats, Prussia has by far the largest portion of representation on the Bundesrat, with 17 seats. The next largest contingent, held by Hannover, is just over half of that, at 9 seats. Interestingly, the far-flung holdings of the Empire are represented in the Bundesrat as well.

The sole official language of the country - Elamite - is only spoken by just under sixty percent of the population. However, Arabic (Presumably Khuzestani, although the survival of the Elamites as an ethno-linguistic group might have radically changed the development of the dialect) and Persian are both recognized minority languages.

On a sidenote: "Los Sóviets Federados de Norte América" would be better for Spanish IMO. We Spanish-speakers tend to use masculine for this sort of stuff (plus, you're using Soviet as "assembly of workers", which would be "sóviet". "Soviético" would be more of an adjective (i.e: Soviet Union = Unión Soviética).). Hope that cleared out some stuff.

I wouldn't really say that we the USSR, given that we actually have democracy and socialism.

However, I greatly appreciate the help with the translation, I've always had a really hard time with Spanish grammar.

Much of their industry is centered around agriculture and the nation's thriving petrochemical industry.

Also the oil industry there is a state-owned enterprise; the overarching holding group is the Petrol-Elam Corporation, to which all other petroleum companies there belong as subsidiaries.

They seem to be a modern tech communist version of the star trek federation (I make that connection mainly because they explicitly say that they were founded to ensure peace). Though they do seem to be primarily focused on Russia and China since their flags are featured in their coat of arms.

Russia (Wawakanatote/Soviet Union) and China are the two nation's which set the foundation, as well as being the two largest members, for the Supranational Union. Other than that, I would agree with this evaluation - though compared with Star Trek, we aren't that technologically advanced nor are we that far into the future. //skip//
