"Nemais Gregory, the man loved and hated by his people. What an interesting soul. I ponder how long he will hold this rule. If you were a king of Corpses the mixed opinion would seem overwhelming.

So many shifty things must be happening around him and it even bleeds into his upbringing. It's a rare case where I see someone get pushed around to the point where they not only bear their fangs but bite back.

My only question is, why have you fallen to faith to disgract you from your true nature? Was it a power play to relate to your people or was it a true breakthrough? Would you even be accepted by your God with what you have done, bood doesn't come out that easy, especially in gods eyes."-Lluden Morris pages through a book, musing to himself. An image catches his eye, and he stops, giving the page a shot. It's for Luden of the Low bloods, the old leather-bound book feeling chalky on his fingers.

"Cool," he thinks, his eye scanning down from the horns to his spindly hands.

"Human, but immortal... I'm now curious as to some of his abilities. At some point in time, I'll have to see if I can get in contact. Parental death? I know how that feels, I guess I'm lucky that my dad never turned into a dangerous monster. Fought in a war, was shot, came back and kept fighting. Nice, if I got back up after being shot, I think I'd probably walk away from the fighting and go get a lottery ticket instead, thanking both Fate and the cocaine. I gotta say that I admire him being there for a friend that had nobody else, as someone that was on the other end of that I'm eternally grateful. I have to say, he feels in some ways quite familiar, I wouldn't mind ever meeting him."

Satisfied with what he's read, he shuts the book, staring out for a second before getting up to put it back on the shelf, feeling a new fire in him to one day find this Luden.

Ok so who are you? Marshal Wilhelm Fatilly. I almost read your surname as fatality. From your response to Morris, I don't have very high expectations, but let's read your bio anyways. So during the war, you were a 14 year old partisan. Why did your father decide that it was a right idea to let you become one. It might have been smarter if you stayed with your mother since you were still a child back then, but at least you made it out alive. You even started reading out on literature, which is good... but it might have been safer if you did it with your mother, where you have less of a chance of getting killed by the nazis.

After the war, you saw the Soviets take over East Germany, and you thought that the commies and nazis were very similar. Something you can say about most if not all authoritarian regimes. You know what is also similar? The old nazi regime you fought against and your new ideas after your political shift share some characteristics. It got some nationalism. You called democracy a 'representation of the mob' and you also talked about a certain 'decadence.' In the post-war period, your mother also died... in a way that wasn't very pleasant...

Then you went to Liberia, where you met what I assume to be your future wife and you both started a political career that would eventually end with you coupling the government and turning Liberia into another authoritarian state. You then fought a terrorist group which killed a 1000 civilians. You even personally led the armies that fought them. While this is good for moral, it could have bring you in danger. But at least you are still alive.

My final conclusion is that you are a bit of a hypocrite. The policies of the LsP share a lot of similarities with that of other fascist movements. I'm talking about the autarky, the "revolutionary conservatism" (what does that even mean), and of course, your anti-liberalism. The system also seems ripe for abuse. A dictator can rig the tests to make political opponents fail. And who decides when someone has enough experience to be promoted. That brings me to another problem. How many people in your government are actually Liberian? Because to me, it seems like you have created another Rhodesia.

"Oh how I do love the Hague-like questioning from international organizations which have no business conducting such measures... but even so, I will entertain the questions levied at me by... is it Director Lang? Director... ah, Liang, excuse my pronunciation. First, I've little to say of Morris but what I've done so already... I didn't realize it was pertinent to include his rabid drug abuse and youth shenanigans as I found that... perhaps unprofessional to say the least, so as I've stated already, he seems a swell fellow with some problems, similar to most of us I'd say haaha! Ahem... In reference to my father allowing me to participate in partisan activities during the war; I was not often on the frontlines Director, at least not until the end I suppose, and further more... we were not minorities within Germany, but should we have been caught I have no doubt we would have received a similar fate to the them. We were fighting for our survival Director, and my father knew that... Furthermore... do you seriously believe I was reading this literature while on the battlefield? During my away time sure, but I'm not that great at multi-tasking Director ha! Then... dear God... to compare my government to being similar to a Nazi regime? I would call for a mental check on your part, but I doubt they conduct those in this mad house! Director... we conduct a civic form of nationalism in our country, one which does not breed suspicion of foreigners but actively promotes assimilating them, and holds pride in being a Liberian regardless of race or any other external factor. Your liberal regimes hear nationalism and jump to Nazism? I am worried for the power this international organization holds should that be the case... And to compare us to the racist regime of Rhodesia... well I've heard far more preposterous claims before, but I really can't remember when. Our regime is without racial quotas director... Our nation is a third French, both black and white, and only about fifteen percent or so of our nations demographic is white, add .01 for me I suppose haha! But, I don't see why that really matters when all of our nations peoples enjoy the same liberties and freedoms as each other under the law of our well-founded constitution. Dearest Director, at the risk of sounding like a bit of an a*s, as though I didn't already, it seems you've not been well informed... however, I don't truly believe that to be the case at all, no... rather I believe that you know exactly what you're doing, or trying to do, and that the weak facade of your liberal-democratic enlightenment is slipping... I see through to your iron-fisted bureaucracy Director... I could go on for several hours, and should you like I will, but frankly, I believe I'm done with this kangaroo court. Ahem, sleep well Director." -Marshal Wilhelm Fatilly

Morris finds a letter in the Columbia mailbox, addressed to the previous President, Bailey Washington. Curiously, he opens it up and reads it, realizing he definitely doesn't know very much of anything about the situation, and boards the next train to Louisiana, where she is spending her later years, nearly dropping it at the station. On the train, he pulls up his phone, calls her, and tells her to meet up with him at Lafayette Station.

She's there when he arrives, watching the locomotive she helped design in her younger days -- Southern Railways #1000, Bonnie Blue -- pull into the station, gliding on its eight driving wheels, divided into sets of four, helped along with its front and rear trucks. Its technology, and the torrefied biomass fuel, gave it a clean burn and almost no smoke or smell as it lazily drifted to the platform.

On their way back on the bus, she tells him about her and Alastair's friendship. "Oh," she said "he was certainly a figure, at least until his drinking caught up with him. I wonder how he's doing, though I suppose that letter you told me was from him would contain it."

Morris could see her legs bouncing, and she seemed impatient, but he decided not to press on with it.

"I knew I should have suggested some other coping methods when I had the chance, like... erm... huh. Nothing's coming to mind, but I'll let you know when it, uh, does. Anyway, yeah, Alastair was one of the few kings I have no qualm with. I remember being... I suppose surprised, though not shocked, when he fell ill a few years back. His wife, who I assume wrote the letter for him, I don't know if I met more than a few times, but I remember as a fine woman. Caring and calm, I do imagine she's handling the island well in his, erm... absence. They have a few children, and I can't say I recommend anyone to rule more than a mother. I should write a letter back, if you can stay long enough to bring mine back with you when you return to Murfreesboro."

"Columbia," Morris reminded.

"Oh, right, Columbia. Sorry."

She kept as straight a face as possible, but twinges of crestfallenness shone through the edges of her mouth and eyes. Perhaps in recognition.

I dont see much different about you than the Old franco, Except the fact you somehow rule Nacimeria. Anyone who rules that place is bankrupt somewhere, weather it be morally, or mentally. But on top of that the Nacimeria you rule is over spain. I shudder to think how my life would be if the spanish had that much influence over Nacimeria when I was born. I doubt I would have even lived to see my 18th birthday. The Americans Annexing Spain with it somehow going this well is something that would have caused a collapse of society.*

Thats ignoring the fact that you are technically already dead. Meaning im giving my opinion on a ghost right now.

Everything else about you is pretty normal thankfully.

You ninja'd me and I didn't see you, my bad. But, EAE has you covered unless you want two replies. Sorry for the uncertainty, but there will be a next time in which I won't fail you if you frequent this thread. /SKIP

No problem man, these replies take a long time so chance to get ninja'd is high. 🙄

Resilient, brave & bold, bit tempered at times but my interactions with her, while they have been short, and a bit passive aggressive at times she hasn't ever gotten under my skin. Infact I think the way she speaks her mind and fears no one is rather unique in some folks I see around the multiverse.

Oyher than her personally, I will admit I'm fairly curious of her and the people in the nation.

She alone has a shroud of mystery around her, I know her combat skills well but her personal side is like staring into a fog.

I wonder what others feel of her, is she seen in ill light or perhaps beloved and trusted.

I'm also curious of their technology is so interesting, I think my veiw of her is a bit towards the positive light in the end."-Luden

"Hey, what can I say about this "King of Corpses" fellow? Past the disfigurement, I can see a man fervently clinging to hope. A guy who still believes in people. You don't see a lot of that nowadays, certainly not within the City—as if a disease of apathy has infected every single body here. He's not some pot-bellied royal slouch who sleazes around all day, I know that much. He owns a journal full of exploration entries, proving himself to be quite a proactive ruler. Meanwhile, back here in the City, only a handful of people truly know what any of the Administrators look like in person. So it's safe to say this ruler has been to places, some of which may fascinate me. I don't know if I would have any time to spare to sit down with him and enjoy a beer, but King Luden sounds like a nice person if you get to know him."

"Worked as a Fixer, eh? Quite the job. Good pay, when your diving into the darkest of secrets to be exploited by you or the organization you worked for. Shame that it didn't work well that you got demoted because of personality differences. That wouldn't be justified on my watch, got to have more reason than a petty excuse. Otherwise, it's good to see Ryoshu was able at least to find better by going freelance. Although, the way he makes out the death of his wife and child not bold well by merely making it an unfortunate fact of life. Sure, it is, but when operating a business it's best that the owner is sound of mind and not distracted by buried sorrow. I recommend talking to a therapist."

- Supreme Chancellor John Mercer, only giving that helpful tip after reading "How to ensure the well-being of your underlings 101" guidebook.

The Supreme Leader, Zevqir now in 3d

Now who is the next person we've got. What is wrong with you?! You are trying very hard to look tough in your picture. The typical low confidence of alien scum. The reason why you wear all those dark clothes is probably because you're a coward who wants to easily hide in the shadows, contrast to me: The Supreme Leader of the Sqalmar Followers and Ultra-Galactica, who wears a bright "crown" to show everyone who leads this place.

So you lived in an orphanage, probably because you were so ugly your parents abandoned you. Even though they're also ugly aliens. Apparently no-one knows your last name. Isn't it Mercer? Why in Ultra-Galactica's name are your species so stupid. Maybe that's why you made the dumb decision to kill the glorious gods of Ultra-Galactica. Wait what am I reading further along? You are a criminal?! Who gambles?! You're disgusting, I want to shoot you with a plasma rifle. So anyway, in a bar you heard about some guy talking about Andrew Ryan's "North Atlantic Project". You were interested in that. Probably so you could steal more stuff from it. To do that, you even wrote a lot of letters to Andrew himself so that he would let you into big underwater city. Underwater city? Was Andrew part of those fish-aliens or something?

So eventually you go to Rapture but instead of stealing stuff, you do medical experimentation and create an anti-ADAM. So you created drugs? You say that it was "safer", but I don't believe it. You're criminal, why should I believe that its safe. Then you sell it to the masses?! For Ultra-Galactica's sake, you are even worse then the average alien. You even helped plunge that country into a civil war. Lying to everyone for power by faking your death. You really are horrid alien scum. You are the one that deserves to be shot point-blank. Or better, sacrificed in the name of Ultra-Galactica. Then maybe you would have some use. Also, why do you have so many weapons?! Are you so cowardly that you need all of these weapons. As a brave Sqalmar ex-soldier, I was only armed with my trusty plasma rifle, and even with that I can probably fight better then you with all your alien trash. Glory to Ultra-Galactica!!!

You are an extraterrestrial creature. A real one? Well, I mean, technically me too as I wasn't born on Earth but I'm human so lots of people here don't imagine things that way. Oy yeah, this is about you, not me, ehehehehehehehe. Moving on. Not nervous!

Zev, Zev, Ze -yeah, that's a hellish consonant cluster- I'm gonna call you Zev for now. You are first and lastly, some kind of dogmatist. Eh, how dissapointing. You'd think that a species that managed to make it to space would be able to control sociocultural trends that would lead their neighbors to wanna smash their teeth in? You got teeth right, Mister, uh mister?....raider? Ah well, anyways. And, you are insane. Geeee-whiz, your people must be insane to allow an insane person to lead them. Somebody who can't think straight shouldn't be qualified to lead
