Ja Rule - Clap Back

Dude sounds like a commercial-ass DMX ripoff...

EDIT: And dude, having a bunch of chicks rubbing all over you in your video doesn't make you look like a gangster...it makes you look like a fake-ass douchebag.

Yeah; they're also kind of disturbing to me. Putting aside the obvious female objectification aspect, there's also some psychological messages in the fact that the rapper (particularly if they're black) needs to 'adorn' themselves in jewelry, be surrounded by cars, women, etc. in order to be consider 'real' or 'dope' or a 'man,' which is really a reflection of the insecurity that the industry (and society really) perpetuates on males (also particularly if they're black, or a minority in general). And that message is then subconsciously sent out to the people who watch the video; that you aren't a man if you're not surrounded by women and material possessions, boasting about it whenever you can.

Yes, that's quite a heavy analysis for a freaking music video, but I want to be aware of what's going on, beyond the fact that it's commercial trash...knowledge is the key to set the mind free. ☐

I honestly think being poor for most of my developing years has actually been a good thing for me, because I've been thinking of sooo many ways to avoid catering to our consumerist, materialism, conformist society. And actually give a shit about being renewable and "Green". And not living in an oversized house (Anything my idea involves living in an undersized house)

Yeah, it's pretty much the same thing there. Though I would say it's harder for women since the world is dominated by mostly men.

Being poor can either be a great teacher or a cruel oppressor...it's kind of odd when you think about it.

I think a similar thing happened to me. I wouldn't say I was poor growing up, but certainly not financially stable. I used to want all this stuff that we couldn't afford...then when we reached a financial position where we could afford some of the things I wanted, all I wanted was books and music at that point. And now I try to cut back on excess consumption wherever I can.

Needing new clothes? Screw that, why do I need new clothes if my 5-year old clothes still fit me?

Need a big house? Eff that, I'm not going to make use of it the space anyway.

Buying lots of garbage you don't need? Bleh, pointless (Though you don't really need books and I'd probably get a lot of those)

Ect ect ect
