I remember when that happened because I obsessively check the Moderation forum because I like seeing the drama and/or bloodbaths when a thread full of rulebreaking happens and has to get trawled.

Edit: I also remember one other user had one of their accounts DEATED because one of the puppetswept users had used their account before and, while they did get that account restored, that's exactly why the mods say not to share accounts and that it's done at your own risk.

This isn't a cliché but let us never forget the thread where someone pretended that a nuclear bomb had gone off in Moscow and somehow was able to post despite them saying that the explosion had almost blinded them and, even when they claimed that the electricity had gone off in their area, were somehow still able to post.

The explosion of slaver nations over the past couple weeks has made the NS RP forums even more of a snooze fest than they usually are. Come on guys, there's other ways to show that your nation is edgy and evil.

I've been slaving for almost four years.

In 2021, Lord President George Fenwick lost re-election and sacked Munkchester. He and his son promptly escaped from community service in Sweden to international waters. Today, still wanted by the government, they survive as slavers of fortune. If you have a problem, if no one else can help, and if you can find them, maybe you can hire... the Fenwick Foundation.

Honestly yeah I don't think slave markets should be allowed in GE&T. The possibility of them devolving into NSFW RP is pretty high. IIRC one of the recent ones is offering "companion slaves" and if that isn't a codeword for something not allowed I don't know what is. There's another selling slaves in "breeding pairs" which is a little but sussy.

I mean the mods have always been pretty clear that (so long as it doesn't fall foul of any topics that are explicitly prohibited), you're allowed to imply or otherwise make mention of more mature elements in your RPs so long as you don't go past PG-13.

It's like how you couldn't make a thread where to post in detail how your nation tortures criminals (well you could make a thread like that if you want it to be locked and you given a warning for PG-13 violations at the minimum) but you could make a thread just fine where you just mention that torture is used in your nation (hell you can also get away with mentioning the methods you use, no one is going to think saying 'Thieves and rapists are punished by public whipping' is violating PG-13)

A mild cliché for people on here has to be confusing measures for various things like volume, weight, density, etc.

Especially when it gets rather god awful like "300 caliber cannons" and whatnot... Which doesn't make sense, since you don't really use caliber like that. Caliber refers to the diameter of the inside of the gun (hence, "the caliber of this gun is 15.2cm" and whatnot) and isn't an actual proper term of measure, beyond small arms. Even then, it's referred to as being based on an inch. So, a .50cal sniper rifle is a rifle in 12.7mm in terms of bore. Aka, the diameter of the bullet it fires.

Likewise, some people also oddly confuse miles with kilometers or treat them as one and the same, then there's confusion about volume and weight, or even things like Mach number, which usually refers to the speed of sound in laboratory conditions at sea level.

~~Totally not mildly ranting because I confused CM and MM again for the 3rd time, nope.~~

I always have to convert measurements whenever I post about them IC because Gandoor canonically exclusively uses the metric system and I'm an Americunt who barely even understands the fuckin customary units of measurement that I'm supposed to use in this country, do you expect me to understand metric too?

As a fellow Americunt, metric is devil magic that works, somehow, but then I look at imperial and think "yea this is totally better" before my brain breaks over the question of "how many inches are in a foot, how many feet in a yard?"

I am also American-born, though I lived a goodly chunk of my childhood in Europe, so I have a bit more experience with metric than most. Plus I'm a Physics Teacher. I'd like nothing more than feet and miles and pounds to go the way of the dodo.

I was always amused at the fact that the US is all 'We're not going to conform to the rest of the world!' when we're using the same system as the country we declared independence from. And then we celebrate that date by firing off a bunch of fireworks that were made in China.

True independence.

imperial works better for day-to-day measurements.

if it's 0 degrees celsius outside, it's gonna be pretty cold. grab a hoodie. if it's 100 degrees celsius outside, you're gonna fucking die. you're, like, in an actual oven.

if it's 0 degrees fahrenheit outside, it's freezing. get a heavy coat. if it's 100 degrees fahrenheit outside, you're gonna be hot. you're not gonna die in 6 minutes, but it's gonna be pretty hot.

if something's a bit away from you, it's easier to say "a few feet away" than "a few centimeters away" or "a few meters away."

To be honest, it doesn't help that existing terminology is a bit inconsistent, with mm and inches being used for each caliber (i.e: standard-issue rifles tending to use 7.62x51mm and 5.56x45mm, the M2 Browning and anti-material rifles using .50cal, naval guns being the most inconsistent of them all - with US ships using inches for their main guns and European indigenous designs using metric).

Yeah it's easy to say that something works better for day-to-day measurements when that's the thing that you're used to using, that doesn't mean it's inherently the correct or best one to use.

I post on another forum where (for one reason or another) there's periodically threads about date formats and the threads always devolve into Americans insisting that the American date format of Month Day Year is the best one because 'that's the way people actually speak' and 'no one actually says Day Month', even though people do say the day first and then the month.
