Nothing about Princess Ingrid in particular unless we were absolutely blind and missed out. Sigh, with that said, let's look at her from the surface level of it. Already, I don't like it. War is good, war is great, the man who blew up the world twice. You know what else is in your hands? The blood of the innocents. I know it sounds terribly cliché, but I have no likes for people like you who killed so many who are undeserving. Even for the deserving, I would go over to them personally and smack them, not launch a missile and hoping it hits. The only solace I can take in is that this Princess along with many of her cronies are not going over to Valentine Z any time soon, and I am not intent on seeing them here, not now. 6 billion died. 6 billion died and I can't fucking save all of them. And here you are playing soldier and putting lives in danger! No one is going to hold your hand when you die in a battlefield. QUOTE

"Dr. Chisana Akagi has traits that I love and traits that I despise. Let's start with the stuff I like about her. She has an unnaturally high IQ and is fluent in 12 languages (both of which I find to be quite impressive), and the fact she made many technological advancements to her country is something she should be proud of. I certainly am. She also takes a non-interventional stance, so that's pretty swell as well. However, there were things I found about her that I really dislike, her stances on capitalism and recreational stuff I will not say. But what I find interesting about her is that she's the leader of a nation and she's 19 years old. My wife was 18 when she was first running the country, so I find that to be interesting about her. Overall, I think Dr. Akagi is a pretty interesting figure, and with her immense intelligence, I believe she could lead her country to greatness."

"With such values dissonance and him being rather radical in his authoritarian regime, I suppose, that his preference to non-interventionism is the reason, why he didn't decide to attack us already, believing, that we are just another bunch of raiders. Or maybe cuz we got plasma guns and explosive drones droppin' cryo grenades. No matter the reasons, it's obvious, that alliance is absolutely impossible between us. Either way, I believe, that we should undermine this regime, cuz they actually kill people for sexuality and are just mean and pushy. By the way, I disrespect your regime cuz it can't even handle a lil' bit of criticism! Now, go and try to prosecute me! C'mon, sweaty, I and a bad boy and I love whips and handcuffs. But no, that ain't gonna happen, so I'll just have a fine drink and love affair too. Now, where did I put the bong? Really! It was on da' sofa a second ago! Aha! Here it is!

Now, before I smoke some nice weed and go play Stellaris afterwards, I'll admit, that ol' Rochester ain't THAT bad. At least, he gave equal rights to athro dudes, which is nice. Really! I loved that! Now, if he wouldn't prosecute people for criticism and sexuality, he'd be far better in the eyes of many. What if his story gonna have redemption ark? I mean, there is potential, man! Potential! For peace and love! Think of the happy anthros, not having to be afraid of prosecution for discussing politics in the kitchen!" -Overboss

Akagi created a massive underground tunnel network with the funds she collected by creating such things as neural interfaces, and when she heard that a plane was to crash on Okinawa, rather than organise effective evacuation efforts, she condemned the people of Okinawa to live like moles under the ground. And yet rather than give these people a fair understanding of their situation, she instead gave token promises of non-intervention and equality, while simultaneously spreading narcotics around under the guise of "Freedom of Mind". Most ironically of all though, is her self-proclaimed opposition to megacorporations, while making enough money to afford this insane venture, and complete it within a mere 2 years, and also continuing to run said company even though she has taken up the mantles of provisional leader of Crimson Tree. This is even without covering her blatant lack of democracy, no apparent plans for elections, and overall shadiness!

"Oh ho ho! A man named Beverly... I admit that's a new one. You just go right on snapping those gender stereotypes in two! Anyway, I gotta say I'm not a fan of being born to a position of authority, but I can at least respect the fact that entry into your university wasn't a given. So one of your biggest achievements was the de jure abolition of the 'Dividing Line' policy, which appears to be some kind of systemic apartheid-like arrangement? I can't help but note that you ALSO made it so that regions that did not agree with the new status quo could create their own variants if they so choose.

"You'll have to pardon me if I don't consider such a thing a real 'achievement'. You basically removed the policy without removing the policy! Maybe your 'skilled oratory' could keep people thinking you did something, but I'm pretty confident in saying that you made the worst possible move. In trying to keep your opponents placated, you set the stage for a worse confrontation down the line. The point of being a leader is to be decisive. Good or bad, at least a decision was made. What you did... it was so much smoke with lots of chatter. I can't respect that."

We also have different views on warfare. She opposes it in all forms, while we tend to believe, that freedom and human rights must be backed up by unrelenting force. First of all, let me just say that my respect for you comes neither from your ways of life neither from the ways in which you govern your folks. Rather, it firstly comes from you being an honorable warrior, one who has proven themselves worthy of power, wealth and other good stuffs. As much as I despise your savage, brute ways, I have to admit that deep inside I find them somewhat intriguing. Being able to roam free, unbound from the limitations of noblesse oblige and its consequences, and lastly but not leastly being able to marry and love whoever you want to, but not whoever you are ordered to. Yet as tempting as this life is, it is my solemn duty to resist it- for to do otherwise would be a shameful thing to do!

Hold on is this the one who said I was spewing bullshit? I already gave an opinion on them and it hasn't changed. You cant even reveal your name to the people of your nati- no its not a nation, its a military group in Alaska? Okay this makes much more sense all of a sudden, your the leader of one of two groups squabbling over your earth right now. Leaders of Para-Military groups don't often get any favor from me, this one especially doesn't. Nearly 500 thousand people attempt to place their faction on top and it hasnt gone to nuclear Armageddon? HR please send this someone else- Nemias Gregory.

(I am genuinely sorry I didnt put much detail, I fell asleep while I was writing)

"In regards to King Ztryker, I cannot help but take a liking to this creature. Ancient and benevolent, he reminds me of my old mentor back on my Homeworld. It is definitely interesting to note that the Zoigai managed to conquer the Globbon's home only for a Globbon to become their very King. As King, I believe Ztryker's rule to be fair and wise. He is not an overbearing monarch, instead he is one who uses his wisdom and influence to convince his people to chose the representatives he believes are best for them. It is also commendable that Ztryker has never sought revenge for past grievances, instead genuinely looking out for the best interests of those he rules. Overall, I would say that without a doubt Ztryker is a marvellous monarch and a wonderful person. I would very much like to meet King Ztryker in person at some time in the future."
