"Ooh hehe, you are quite the character? A poor, lonely man, elevated to a position beyond even the wildest dreams of his younger self - I do love the personal success story, I'm certain you would call this a success, yes? Ah, but the question is, rally, are you lucky or unlucky? I would hope to find out, but I doubt there'll be much communication between us - trapped as you in your own little reality. I suppose its fortunate I'm not into politics - there is just too much brutality in it for my liking, its just not fun - or else Zero would like to see me dragging you for your ideas. I don't really care about ideals - though I suppose, given what I have seen from you, you don't much either - but I do care about effects, I hope to see more of your effects, little Jasper." - The Third Human

But, some things are best left unanswered, this being one of them... It doesn't help that there is much else to go by, and Boss doesn't seem to like to give much of a view on others. I suppose that if there is one thing that I could say, is that I would never have any interest in ever doing business with Wormfodder. There is no benefit, and I have no use for such a product. I'm not sure if she is a Goddess or a God-like creature, but it seems that she obviously possesses God-like powers, such as absorbing the energy of stars around her. Socially, she is a very responsible, wise, and caring leader who helped suffering people to seek a better life on the planets she terraformed as if she is a prophet with miracles. Full of intrigue."

"Hello, M...
Oh for Hytia's sake, I don't think that I could get used to saying aloud these foreign names of which I come across! I mean no offense to you in that regard, I promise... It's always so much easier just looking at the name and having it play out in your head rather than saying it aloud. Anyways, let me try again.

You are President...
President? I have never heard of that term before, sorry. *Ahem*, President M... Mawar Al-Sherbak. I think I got that correct.
Anyways, I'll just refer to you as 'President' for now, if that's okay? It seems like a foretitle by any means, correct? So, mister President, I see clearly that you have lost an eye, and to begin I must apologise on your behalf for that. I can only assume that losing such a vital part of what is needed to function must hinder you in some way, correct?

Though, you say you lost it to a so-called

"Tumor" ? I assume that might be some sort of weapon, perhaps a mace or the like? So, you have seen some scrapes and bruises then. Service in fighting against an enemy to your realm is admirable, and I know that my Regent, not to mention the elusive Knight-General of neighboring Hyrule would agree that it would help justify rulership, though perhaps I have to disagree with that. I mean, like matters of army would be handled not by oneself but a different people or person.

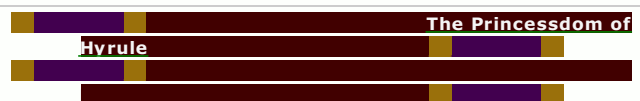

I go on for too long, let me move onto what is said for yourself.

So, you have a notable rival in your realm's management? I admit, I do not envy you in that regard, as that Joseph guy seems adamant to challenging your rule. I'll admit, some people may see my and my Regent's, Avau's relationship as one of rivals, though it is more comfortable than that.

There... Really isn't much said about you as a personal being. I may understand, hiding information about yourself may protect you from being targeted, though surely as leader you may understand that transparency and honesty can be just as helpful to garner the support of your people, correct? As I theorised, you served as General for a short spell, and that your careers have seen you undergo some... I quote, "Odd Deals", so that could be cause for alarm though, naturally you don't elaborate, so I can't say anything concrete.

By any means, it was nice to speak to you, mister President..."

Leader - Prince of the Zora, Ralis

"Ah, Prince Ralis, a pleasure. Before I delve into my thoughts on you, I shall start by responding to what you were curious about from your initial opinion. Firstly, it would not be of any surprise that I do not match with that of any of your races in your realm, as I am not from it, you would be amazed at how many more there are out there that are quite unique. Which will bring me to the next one, Lets just say that what you are seeing of me is but a physical manifestation. I am not actually here, but from the blackness of what is called the void. There are many others besides myself from there, they just are in many other stretches of the Omniverse. I have sort of taken a relaxed style and just do what I please, but at the same time I have grown to appreciate the lives that mortals live, and thus, out of my own volition, decided to help out in my own way. As for the people who are from their own homeworld, it was purely a choice I offered them that which they accepted. If they eventually have a change of heart, then they are free to return. However, there was nothing left for them, thus they remained here. I hope that clears things up. As for the appreciation of living a common life, there's a certain sense of gratification that I receive upon the completion of tasks under such limitations. Lastly, I am going to guess that your realm has a bad experience with darkness. Unfortunately this seems to be common, but this is primarily due to those with impure hearts and evil intentions that seek its power for themselves. If used with pure and good intentions, it is very effective. At the same time, it gives me the power to dispatch those who dare do wrong to me or those under my watch...

Anyway, onto what I think of you. one thing I can start off with is that you are pretty cheerful and modest individual. It is not very often that there are other leaders with such a personality, so it is good to see there are still those out there such as yourself. From what I can see, even though your opinion on ruling isn't that great, your people still love you, as has been proven by the fanfare that you received when you returned that one time. Anyway, since ruling is not your favourite topic, I'll try to delve into your more personal aspects. Your fishing is curious to me, for starters. since you are one of the water, do you only fish outside of it with a rod? or do you also at times go into the water to catch them with your own body, or even a harpoon if that is something you approve of? You admitting to not being a great writer kind of takes me by surprise. from what i have seen so far. you are good with words. i feel you don't give yourself enough credit in that area. you view on morality is also good. same goes with your optimism perhaps, if you are willing, i would love to sit down with you on that topic. admittedly, i struggle with a lack of optimism and a lot of worry, as you say, it is not a good emotion, and i have had way too much first hand experience with it. All in all, I definitely find you one of the more approachable ones here, and i would love to have an opportunity one day to actually sit together and discuss more, maybe even share a few teachings with one another. My opinion of you is very positive."

These two men and their brotherhood<sup>[3]</sup> are a wittihood<sup>[4]</sup> the likes of which even the World's happiest man would weep at the sight of.

There are the elder, Here<sup>[5]</sup> Jiro Rikimaru, and the younger, Here Chikao Rikimaru.

The former would be the wonted<sup>[6]</sup> politician<sup>[7]</sup>, a Prime Minister akin to what one may see in the so-called "democratish" lands of Westeuropa. Outwardly, it would seem indeed that this man is indeed what one may call "unnoteworthy", with the outtake<sup>[8]</sup> that he seems to hate his younger brother as a dog would hate a cat. Reading on his brother, I can say I feel for Here Jiro Rikimaru's hatred.

The latter is, and forgive my uncouthness, a milksoppish<sup>[9]</sup> poofter<sup>[10]</sup>, as the Engles<sup>[11]</sup> would say. Chikao Rikimaru has been called the "biggest scumbag in all of Japan"—I can see why. This man would stab his own brother in the back for a paltry reason that is his room, of all things. He seems to back his fellow poofters calling for so-called "freedom"; freedom fram or to do what, I shudder to think. As such, the twithe<sup>[12]</sup> brother has become his offer<sup>[13]</sup>, and he has set about to do what he could to undermine not only his brother's premiership, but the steadiness<sup>[14]</sup> and frithfulness<sup>[15]</sup> of the Land of Japan. Had this man been in the Japan I know, he would already be either in gefangness<sup>[16]</sup> or at least beaten to half-death and left on the streets.

I would only like to ask: why has the once great Eastern Riche<sup>[17]</sup> of Japan fallen so?

Hey Anatoly, so you're the guard of Yunru, your leader that you think can act very irrational. Some people say that I should have someone looking over me because they think that I act very irrational, but I digress. You grew up in Leningrad as a catholic, which is I think is pretty funny, since I'm pretty sure Russia is more orthodox or something. Anyways, in your interview I read that you went to war against the West because of the whims of of your premier called... ehmmm Romanov? I also read that you still used PPSHs in the 1980s, and I'm now wondering if you know what an AK is. Seeing your soldiers use PPSHs kinda remind me of some pictures I once saw on the galactic internet of some post-ww3 soldiers having PPSHs because they pretty much broke out the museum pieces to arm their soldiers. Ok so you were assigned as artillery-spotter, didn't even know that artillery back then had spotters, never really thought about it but it makes sense considering you probably didn't have the tech for a computer-driven artillery.

So if I read correctly, after the war in the west was won, they send you to invade China without artillery. Did you ever found out why didn't want you to bring in some artillery, because now I'm curious. Eventually, you decided to march to Siberia and followed a woman that I think we all know now. I think following her was a pretty bad idea. Our Political AI predicted that when she dies, there is a 86% chance that the entire paramilitary region will collapse. As for your hopes in bringing peace to your wartorn world... well back in the 21st century we managed to bring peace to our wartorn world, so I believe that it would also be possible for your world.

"Alright, let's look through this next file.... Greg, you sure about this? Well, if you insist. Boss Delivery Worm... Emotional and energetic, dedicated to importing Wormfodder, open for relationship, Vermis Invictus... Ah, wait, there's an interview. Well, not much in this. Seems that she's being interviewed be some kind of bird themed containment organisation. I could have sworn that wacko 'E.L. Wallace' rambled about something similar... Here we are, a bigger interview. Bird hunting, Japanese comics, giving other worlds a spook, strong dislike of children... Well from what I can gather this Boss Delivery Worm seems like a responsible enough employer who loves her job. Don't know why those 'Bird' guys are after her, but if they're anything like Wallace it'd be explanation enough."

"Johnson claims to be the Everyman. Yet, his policies are as favourless as any generic politician. He had no vision to advance beyond what he has observed to be the so-called "right thing" copied and pasted by so many lords besides him. He is unimaginative and stands with an ideology that weakens any true power to realistically stand as the Everyman of Tremulous. Overall, there is so potential and it saddens me to see Johnson not realize it. "

 Leader - Emperor Ferrios Von Stein

"Alright, so Emperor Ferrious feels the need for me to be dispelled from the reality of mortals, simply because that it is not the place of beings such as myself to rule. However, I should probably point out, that while I do agree to an extent, it all comes down to choice... You claim that I deprive the humans within my own realm the challenge, however it was their choice to accept the offer of a life free of the tyranny and enslavement that which you speak of. the people freely run themselves within their own society and build their own destinies, that much i have given them it is also their choice as to whether or not they wish to leave. i do not hold them here, nor do i wish to. if they all suddenly decided that they wish to return to their home and continue themselves without me, then i would gladly let them but if the people feel comfortable to stay under my wing, then why would i deprive them of the security and prosperity that which they receive? perhaps that will come one day, i do not know for certain, but whatever their choice, I accept it. I have my own destinies to manifest, much like they do.

As for Emperor Ferrious himself, the more I read, the more I feel there is some conflict with what he spoke of me. He mentions that mortals are the masters and builders of their own destinies, yet there are those under his rule that are deprived of doing so with his absolute and totalitarian rule. Everything he says is what shall be, there is no choice for his people. While I can see that there are a few positive factors in his choices, such as providing quality healthcare and education, not to mention the restrictions on free market capitalism and preventing corruption. but, there is just so much that is forced onto them... His position against environmentalism is also disheartening. Any kind of disrespect towards the natural world will eventually lead to long term consequences... Overall, while the Emperor is definitely the master and builder of his own destiny, it has come at the cost of so many others who can no longer do the same without escaping his. I would have to sit down with him and speak more of his reasons. Maybe we can find some kind of common ground and level of respect, but for now, I remain wary of him.."
