Manifest Destiny wasn't too God-Given in their setting. As the nascent Colonies of Atlantia were crushed by the Danelaw and they partitioned into kingdoms, eventually evolving into North and South Kingdoms of New England and Waldhereland in the 19th Century. One of them also lost a war against New Spain in the 1850s...so much for Westward Ho. On the bright side, they had to be more cooperative with the natives when slowly reaching inland and that prevented a lot of bloodshed.

Sweden-Norway not only survived into the 1930s, but ended up getting invaded by soviets. It makes me wonder what's going on in the rest of the world.

Chairman Mao ordered the creation of a city in another dimension, Mars and Earth had a war, and for some reason France decided to side with China after the Sino-Soviet split. You've really created something strange, but if this is what's needed to prevent Dengism I'll support you.

Empress Hyeja Park's economic programs to get California back on it's feet started by focusing on the agricultural sector, for primarily practical and strategic reasons, to obtain self-sufficiency and keep the populace fed healthy. This began with adding welfare assistance (hardware and fertilizers) to farming families. On an unrelated note, the Empress is older than she looks, they're 30.

The Dominion of the Air's relations with the US started after the Roswell Incident in 1946, whereupon an overconfident captain tried flying by a military base assuming the cloaking capabilities of the craft they were in would protect them from being fired upon; this failed in the least spectacular way possible and ended with the death of the captain, and only one ensign being left to

Matthew Young Smith, the current head of the Nacradian state, has a relatively well-decorated military career behind him, having earned three separate honours for his service during the War in Iraq, and also known for his skill at marksmanship.

The first thing I learned is that you're not aware that this:

Forces a sidebar to align along the left side of the page. It makes for a more consistent graphic design presentation imo.

Secondly, I learned that William Howe wasn't an utter incompetent TTL and fucked over the early revolutionaries- judging by the portrait used, he defeated them as early as Bunker Hill. ~~At least we still dumped your tea in the harbor.~~ Another thing to note that I saw was there's a discrepancy in this line: "These ten colonies rose in uproar against the Danelaw." Elsewhere you state there being eleven colonies under the Danelaw's rule.

The relation that the pantheon of wind "gods", independent beings that fill the Sky Mother's roles in nature, have with human beings can best be described as ambivalent, as they're not tied to a specific set of rules or moral behavior. Like the forces of nature that they personify, they can be both benevolent to the Ghesites (making grass and seasonal crops grow) for the pastoralists, or they can wreak havoc with malevolent intent (destructive thunderstorms and unusually chilly weather).

While there's a low amount of petty crimes in the Caleshan, very violent ones are the high bar instead, due to many Caleshans having energy so pent up that it can't be expressed by words, only violence. Very harmful violence.

Nathan is back. He leads an army of humans and machines against aliens. There are shipgirls, and there is abyssal fleet, and there are also grey aliens which I presume look like stereotypical aliens. Their extensively large reserve force notwithstanding, Zitragrad's armed forces make for 1.3% of its total and 2.2% of its useful population. Of the 1.3 million that serve, there are slightly less than 3 men to every woman, which is a lot more impressive for their military egalitarianism than it should sound. Conscription exists, but the personnel number that serve drafted mostly do so in the Army, in which they make two out of every five soldiers.

That Britain (or, more accurately, the Danelaw) is in the EU, but Ireland isn't. Also, if I'm reading the English correctly, they account for 80% of the population of the British isles.
