The other day on a documentary a kid who play a musical instrument was mimicking playing a trumpet. He mentioned that the trumpet song he was mimicking was from Shakira which you can listen to in the following Video 1. What that kid does not know is that the trumpet song in Shakira song "Hips Dont lie" was taken from another much older song "Amores como el nuestro" ("Love like Ours") which was song by J. Rivera which you can hear in Video 2 below.

Video 1 Shakira - <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=DUT5rEU6pqM>

Video 2 - Salsa singer J. Rivera from Puerto Rico -

Well, their album "Fear of a Blank Planet", which was on sale once. Bought it, liked it, bought the live album Warsawa, which is okay, but I prefer the other one. I am a big fan of vinyl and CDs, but it's hard to find some stuff sometimes.

Rabbit Heart (Raise it up) - Florence + the Machine

I've never been one to care for live albums that much (I did buy Sigur Ros' live album and documentary, though, and they are a pretty impressive live band). And I am a fan of physical CD's too. Not sure how much I care about vinyl's just because I never really had much time in my caring years to know if I like them. My dad used to have a record player, but it broke or something.

Typically it seems to be people in the last generation that like physical CD's still, but I much prefer the idea of getting the physical CD's to have then buying iTunes's. And besides, when I think about it, iTunes isn't as good of a deal. When you buy physical CD's, you can 'burn' them onto your computer, and my dad said it's really easy to turn them into exactly what iTunes gives you. So for the same price (add on shipping for some), you get a CD, lyric sheet (possibly), lovely artwork (if the band has artwork), and it available for your phone (if you pay monthly for Spotify, it actually lets you transfer even easier, too), or you could just spend money on iTunes and buy something that has absolutely no resell value if you get bored of the music. So when I think about it, physical CD's is the obvious choice.

I suggest their albums The Incident, In Absentia, and Deadwing, though I don't really consider any of their albums bad. Just the more recent ones are best to start off with.

That's also true. When we buy CDs we burn them so we have A. a backup and B. we can listen to them wherever we want via a usb-stick/hdd/mp-3 player (My parents always do it in CD-like WAV-format though...) We got too many record players. One in my parents room, one downstairs, one in my room and one in the attic, plus one that misses quite a few parts. I love vinyl, but I don't really like it that you only have a short period of actually enjoying the music before you have to turn it around again.

Pretty much.

My dad wants another record player. He has plenty of vinyl's just sitting in his closet on a shelf that can't be used, new and old. He'll probably find one at some point.
