Strictly speaking, if the Germanian Empire existed in real life, it would have been created as a reaction to the establishment of the French Republic and its rabid invasions of the Holy Roman Empire: So to speak, it would be created as a reformation of that Holy Roman Empire. Why this Holy Roman Empire literally stretched (prior to their victory in the first world war) from the Narrow Sea to Prussia and from Scania to Istria is another question.

The Caribbean Confederation has intervened in various conflicts during the Cold War period, including, but not limited to; the Indochinese Civil War, the Liberian Civil War, and various other minor civil wars. In particular, during the Indochinese Civil War, the Caribbean was joined by the United States and Japan in supporting the LNF, an all-immigrant group trying to establish a multi-ethnic state in Indochina.

Something interesting I learned is that Mirandese is a recognized language. However, Mirandese wouldn't be an officially recognized language in the OTL until 1999. So unless this is a recent addition, I gotta say, it's quite interesting to think of why they were recognized earlier in history, especially when a practical world war is happening. Perhaps the Mirandese fought an epic struggle against the bad guys and the government thought "Oh shit, they cool, let's recognize them.", or maybe the government wanted to represent all peoples so gave their language special status instead. It doesn't say why in the factbook, but I still oddly wanna see why.

While the URoE claims to be a one-world government, it's a very sad, pathetic one- even its ability to assert control over half of the world is an unstable one, as travel is not considered safe and open for citizens outside of western Europe and portions of Australia. It can't even guarantee that the majority of New Zealand is entirely safe for travelers. It's thusly a very very large PR flop with a military- which, all things considered, isn't too different from the UN, ~~except now instead of just watching the genocide, the blue helmets can actually participate.~~

The Syndicalist Assembly is the most vulnerable political entity in the Reach, being constantly bullied courteously reminded that they have to provide the neighboring imperialists with raw materials that fuel their never ending wars of aggression. However, there is still hope for their system to spread, by allying with the warlords and free peoples that defy the bureaucrats and bringing down the Intern Military Government, the biggest threat to the revolution.

As expected of a PT society, their warriors tend to use workshop or custom-made equipment; though some common trends can be marked down: those who can afford it use metal helmets and chainmail armor, while commoners settle for hardened skins and the icheahupilli, erm, the Inqua. The spear, the battleaxe and a wooden shield are also their reliable gear of choice when going up against enemies.

Despite the rather liberal and democratic nature of the UCBR, it surprisingly runs on a state-planned command economy where quotas for the production and distribution of goods are set by administrative burrows.

Despite the different name this state above me is a possible result of what would happen if the German Empire never fell and it didn't lose it's new superpower status after winning World War One. It's interesting they are ruled by a Kaiserin instead of a Kaiser. That is different.

"The traditional form of government of Airceltria featured two heads of state a secular Grand Vizier and the more religious Grand Master or Mistress of Ancient Mysteries. Power is always shifting between the two seats, but the Grand Master or Mistress seems to have a slight advantage being also afforded the title of Electus or Electa Auraroe, meaning as I can tell that they are the defacto representative of both the state and religion before foreign dignitaries and international events.

The House of Ashwood is usually the premier house to produce such scions considering that according to their mythologies the Founder of the House was responsible for the Founding of the Nation as a whole."

World War 3 in their timeline began in the late 25th century, and resulted in the deaths of nearly 80 billion people (out of a pre-war population of 124 billion) throughout the colonized Solar System, with barely a hundredth of these deaths belonging to combatants. Humans weren't the only casualties though, with a score and a half of moons and countless planetoids and asteroids throughout the system being outright destroyed intentionally and unintentionally over the course of the 55-year long conflict.

Their national anthem is based off of the UK's "God Save the Queen", and has lyrics similar to the Austrian-Hungarian Empire's "God Save Kaiser Franz". Furthermore, their world's Japan seemed to have won in the Pacific War, therefore holding power over one of three alliances post-war.

Their version of Mexico is seemingly isn't a fail state. Though, only barely. National trauma from their defeat by the hands of the USC, memories of revolutions, and a Zapatista insurgency equipped with modern weaponry from foreign backers still haunt the Mexican Empire. Which it's leader for some reason is still called a President.
