This sounds like Russian Tetris. The Complete History Of The Soviet Union, Arranged To The Melody Of Tetris has forever altered Tetris music for me.

I kept seeing the name around and some friend of mine was talking about how much they've evolved and changed their style around. So I was giving their electronic stuff a listen because I enjoyed a song he posted. Interesting to evolve from black metal into freaking electronic music.

Their style is all over the map. I've been finding myself listening only to death/black/doom metal and electronic.

Definitely interesting, and that can be a good thing if done well.....Though I know a band that throws in like 3 or 4 different styles and they all sound terribly done. And honestly from the brief listening I did of them they sound very bland and repetitive after a while, like they really don't do anything worthwhile even if they want to think they do.

I'll check out that Karnivool song if I can get out of the awesomeness that is Ulver. So strange and unique.

I've heard some of their first album but that's it. I should definitely listen to some.

I'm testing this out. It sounds a bit like Tool, but different.

That's probably because it's true. If it comforts you at all, I may possibly prefer Karnivool over tool.

But now I need my ear bleach.

Relistening to the new Karnivool song.

Their first stuff is black metal and I have had a hard time liking black metal for some reason. Try Blood Inside. It incorporates rock, electronic, jazz, classical, and industrial music.

Both Karnivool and Rishloo have some minor influences to Tool, especially in one of Rishloo's songs, but overall they are very unique with unique singing styles and both have some of my all-time favorite singers because of their style.

There's no doubt there are similarities b/w the two, I just think that it's unfair when people say "oh it's like an aussie tool", cause I see that quite a bit.

I have a hard time liking black metal too. It's mostly only symphonic black metal I can like, or blackened genres like blackened death. Black metal by itself is too lacking.

It's got a Tool vibe to it, but it's definitely not an Aussie Tool.
