Skipping AN for forgetting something.

That... eh... would prolly count as high treason, so a death sentence.

Impersonation of the leader (but not in a cruel way, just for laughs).

If you accidentally killed his dog, then you have to buy him a new one. If you intentionally killed his dog without justification, then John Wick can purchase a license to kill the dog murderer.

Have fun when the T-15 Armatas begin shelling you with 57mm shells.

Bulldozing the local town hall with a purchased, self-upgraded (wood spaced armor) T-80U fitted with a dozer blade, after also shelling it. Because the corrupt local government fucked you over. Ultimately then hog tying the local (corrupt) mayor and executing him with a detcord noose hung around his neck for the public to see. (nobody else was harmed except the local government officials and mayor)

Not a crime. The best case scenario is that you'd become a legend in meme culture, and as for the worst, you'd get poor approval rates.

Not a crime - the onus is upon the broadcaster to have proper security in place, not on the government to compensate for corporate incompetence.

For most cases the sentence would range from 5 to 10 years re-education depending on severity, although there are cases like with forging signatures of central committee or military leaders where the sentence is execution for treason
